A varied programme was submitted by the South London Choral Association at its concert on March 30. In Goring Thomas's cantata 'The swan and the skylark' the poetical character of the music was admirably interpreted by the quartet of soloists-Misses Marwood and Fink, and Messrs. Brierley and Borwell-ably supported by the band and chorus. Eaton Faning's effective dramatic chorus 'Liberty' the members of the choir an opportunity of showing their declamatory powers, of which they took full advantage. The solo in this was expressively sung by Miss Winifred Marwood. Parry's 'Pied Piper of Hamelin' was entered into con amore by all concerned, and its intricate choral and orchestral details were rendered with accuracy and spirit, while the alternate humour and pathos of the narrative were while the alternate humour and pathos of the narrative were suitably portrayed. Mr. George Brierley as the Piper, and Mr. Montague Borwell as the Mayor, sustained their rôles with the requisite intensity of feeling. Quite an ovation was given to the orchestra for its rendering of the 'Tannhäuser' overture; and 'Softly awakes my heart' ('Samson and Delilah'), sung by Miss Wilhelmine Fink, and the 'Hungarian' march ('Faust') completed the programme.

Mr. L. C. Venables, who conducted on this occasion, completed his fortieth season's work in conjunction with the

'THE KINGDOM' AT TUNBRIDGE WELLS.

The first performance in this locality, and probably in the south of England, of Elgar's 'The Kingdom,' which was given on March 30 by the Vocal Association, aroused much interest and attracted a very large audience to the Great Hall. Not only had the work been well rehearsed under the able conductor of the Society, Mr. W. W. Starmer, but the choir had become imbued by him with the enthusiasm and devotional spirit necessary to a proper interpretation of the music. The orchestra—composed chiefly of members of the Queen's Hall and London Symphony Orchestras, and led by Mr. W. A. Easton-contributed largely to the general success of the performance, while a very able quartet of soloists was provided in Miss Lenora Sparkes, Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, Mr. Alfred Heather and Mr. William Higley, the last-named artist especially giving a remarkably fine interpretation of the part of St. Peter. The Association, and especially Mr. Starmer, are to be heartily commended for their enterprise in undertaking the performance of a work which reflected credit on all concerned.

The following awards have been made at the Royal Academy of Music: Goldberg Prize (Tenors) to Thomas Gibbs (Ystradgynlais); Charles Mortimer Prize (Composition) to Christian Carpenter (London); Sterndale Bennett Prize (Female Pianists) and Louisa Hopkins Memorial Prize to Helen M. Dodd (Newcastle-on-Tyne).

'The Year-Book and Register of Members of the Incorporated Society of Musicians' (1908) is welcomed as a useful book of reference. The statement on the title-page, 'Twenty-fourth edition,' is rather misleading. 'Twenty-fourth year of issue' would be more correct. The book is

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The orchestral concert given by the students on March 31 at the Queen's Hall was opened pleasantly by Sir Alexander Mackenzie conducting Dr. Cowen's orchestral poem 'A fantasy of life and love.' To this succeeded the first movement of Schumann's Pianpforte concerto, the solo part of which was rendered in a fluent and expressive manner by Miss Norah Cordwell. Another pianist who made a favourable impression was Master Francis Hutchens, who showed much skill and taste in the opening number of Grieg's concerto. Miss Juliet Capron also deserves encouragement for her intelligent and careful playing in Max Bruch's Violin concerto in G minor. Quite a feature of the afternoon was Miss Clara Butterworth's sympathetic rendering of an effective manuscript song entitled 'Fidelity,' by Mr. Montague F. Phillips. Mention is also due of the singing of Miss Hettie Franklin and Miss Edith Kirk.

GUII.DHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Under the direction of the Principal, Dr. W. H. Cummings, the students of the Guildhall School of Music gave a concert at the City of London School on March 25. The orchestra showed efficiency in the first movement of Raff's Symphony in B flat, No. 7 (Op. 201), and the Overture to Rossini's 'La Gazza Ladra,' and in the accompaniments to two soloists. The first of these was Mr. Nissim Tschaikov, who exhibited considerable skill in the solo part of Mozart's Clarinet concerto in A, and the second was Miss Enid Cummings, a niece of the Principal, who sang Mendelssohn's aria 'Infelice' with an intelligence and command of excellent vocal means full of promise for her future success.

LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY

It is pleasant to be able to record further advance in the singing of the London Choral Society under the conductorship of Mr. Arthur Fagge, at the performance of Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius,' on April 1, at Queen's Hall. Greater intensity of expression and verve in attack might have been given by such a body of choristers, but much intelligence was shown, some admirable phrasing was heard, and the accentuation and gradations of tonal force bore witness to careful preparation. The soloists were Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Dalton Baker. The oratorio was preceded by the second performance of 'The Beatitudes' by Edward Maryon, but without the revelation of anything that would make it desirable to alter the opinions recently expressed in these columns.

MR. EDWARD MASON'S CHOIR.

The multiplication of choral societies is to be welcomed, especially in London, for we are a singing nation, and there are few more pleasurable ways of relaxation and artistic enjoyment than in the study of vocal concerted music. Mr. Mason's choir is warmly greeted, for its aims are to forward the progress of British choral music. An earnest of this laudable desire was evinced at the opening concert of the Society on April 4 at Queen's Hall, when the entire programme was devoted to native art. Two novelties were programme was devoted to native art. Two novelties were performed on this occasion, a setting of Charles Mackay's poem 'Tubal Cain,' by Mr. Thomas F. Dunhill, and a choral ballad entitled 'King Estmere,' by Mr. Gustav von Holst. The first of these, not previously heard in Tanana Holst. The first of these, not previously heard in London, is written in part-song-like style, the composer refraining from contrapuntal devices, but he shows a nice perception of tone-colour, and his work is worthy of the attention of small choral societies. 'King Estmere' was quite new and proved to be of a more important character. It is a setting of the old English ballad which relates how King Estmere of England 'Twenty-fourth edition,' is rather misleading. 'Twenty-fourth year of issue' would be more correct. The book is published at the offices of the Society, 19, Berners Street, W. chivalric romance and that valiant sturdiness which are the chief characteristics of the poem. Imagination and cleverness go hand in hand in the choral and instrumental writing, which, moreover, testifies to dramatic intuition. The programme, which was headed by Mr. Hamish MacCunn's overture 'The land of the mountain and the flood,' also contained Parry's 'Soldier's tent,' which was effectively sung by Mr. Harry Dearth, who subsequently gave a spirited rendering of Stanford's 'Cavalier songs.' This excellent selection concluded with Elgar's songs for chorus and orchestra 'From the Bavarian Highlands.' With regard to the choir, it needs more tenor and bass voices to secure a satisfactory balance of tone, and, of course, there is room for improvement in the singing. Mr. Mason is, however, to be congratulated on enlisting the services of a large number of capable vocalists, and also on the decided success of the first concert of the Society.

LA SOCIÉTÉ DE CONCERTS D'INSTRUMENTS ANCIENS.

In these days of large orchestras and loud-sounding novelties, the three concerts given by the above artistic organization at Bechstein Hall on March 25, April 1 and 7, came as a welcome and interesting contrast. The performers were only five in number, and the music was entirely of the 18th century, Mozart being the latest composer represented. Messrs. Edouard Celli, Henri and Marcel Casadesus and Maurice Devilliers formed a quartet of viols—a Quinton, Viole d'amour, Viole de Gambe and Basse de Viole—while M. Alfred Casella was the harpsichordist. Two Divertissements by M. P. de Montéclair were given, the second of which was produced at Versailles in the presence of Louis XIV. and Madame de Maintenon in 1710, the oldworld strains of both proving most delightful. Another concerted work, which so pleased that it was repeated at the second concert, was 'Une fête à la cour des Miracles,' the manuscript of which was discovered at Lyons.

Performed in 1804 at Malmaison' was written over it, but without any name of composer. The music is remarkable for its skill and charm, no less than for its quaint touches of realism. Further reference to this interesting composition is made on p. 310.

It is to be hoped that the success they have achieved in London will induce them to pay us another visit.

RECITALS.

An exceptionally favourable impression was made by Miss Jean Waterston at her vocal recital at Bechstein Hall on March 27. This young artist has a soprano voice of sympathetic quality, it is admirably produced, and although she is not yet quite free from the restraints of studentship, her reading of Weber's 'Softly sighs,' Schumann's 'Der Nussbaum' and the air from 'Je suis encore, tout étourdie' from Massenet's 'Manon,' bore witness to the possession of versatility and individuality. Miss Waterston has all the making of a vocalist who will charm her listeners, a power she already possesses to a considerable extent.

Miss May Harrison, at her third recital at Bechstein Hall on April 6, opened her programme with a little-known Sonata in A by Gabriel Fauré, for violin and pianoforte. The work is an admirable example of French music of the most estimable kind, possessing freshness of ideas and clever workmanship. With the co-operation of Mr. Hamilton Harty at the pianoforte, Miss Harrison evinced sympathy with the composer's methods, and the interpretation may be placed amongst her most successful efforts. Later in the programme the gifted young artist introduced for the first time two pieces, severally named 'Gondolins' and 'Morçeau caractéristique,' for violin and pianoforte, by Mr. Frank Bridge, both compositions being distinguished by pleasing imagination and musicianly resource.

Of the numerous recitals recently given, record is due of the pianoforte playing of Mr. Herbert Fryer, on March 31, at Steinway Hall, when this clever artist, by the thoughtful-reasons of his recent success on the Continent .-In the same hall, on April 8, the Russian pianist Mr. Sapellnikoff gave a recital which was listened to by a large and appreciative audience that enthusiastically expressed its admiration for his masterly readings.—Mr. Arrigo Serato, who was introduced to Londoners by Mr. Busoni at Bechstein Hall on March 3, gave a violin recital on the last day of the same month, when he fully justified the opinions expressed in these columns with regard to beauty of tone and finish of his performances. — In the same hall, on April 9, Madame Julia Culp re-appeared and sang with a persuasiveness of voice, command of expression, and exquisite finish that were most fascinating in their artistic combination.

VARIOUS CONCERTS.

The first performance in London of a new cantata. 'Undine,' by Granville Humphreys, was given in the Great Central Hall, Bermondsey, on March 28, the composer conducting. The principals, Mrs. Granville Humphreys, Miss Beatrice Coxon, Miss Rose Powell, Mr. J. Frost-Lambert and Mr. James Middleton, supported by a band and chorus of 100, gave a very efficient rendering of the

The Oxford House Musical and Dramatic Association gave its final concert of the season on April 4 at Excelsion Hall, Bethnal Green. The choral society and orchestra, under the able conductorship of Mr. Cuthbert Kelly, together with the following artists, Miss Perceval Allen, Mr. J. Campbell McInnes and Miss Fanny Eveleigh (solo violin), interpreted an excellent programme. The choir sang with great expression three numbers from Elgar's 'Bavarian Highlands' and the orchestra played with much spirit Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer night's dream,' Weber's 'Der Freischütz,' and Schubert's 'Rosamunde' overtures, in addition to two movements from Tchaikovsky's Pathetic symphony and an orchestral suite, 'The Ice-Maiden,' by Edith Swepstone.

Mr. Munro Davison's Choral Society gave an interesting concert in the Northern Polytechnic Hall on April 8, when the prominent feature of the programme was Stanford's cantata 'Phaudrig Crohoore.' Madrigals by Benet, Douland and Marenzio, Smart's 'Cradle song,' Elgar's 'O happy eyes' and Dr. Walford Davies's 'Nursery rhymes' were also sung. The soloists were Miss Ada Tunks and Mr. H. Lane Wilson (vocalists), Mr. Philip Cathie (violin), with Mr. Herbert Hodge and Miss Maud Crouch at the organ and pianoforte respectively. Mr. Munro Davison conducted.

The Park Presbyterian Church Choral Society, Highbury, gave an evening concert on April 9, when the programme included Mendelssohn's 'As the hart pants,' Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens,' Schubert's 'The Lord is my Shepherd' (female voices), 'Eight nursery rhymes,' by Walford Davies, and a madrigal, sung for the first time, 'To blossoms,' composed and conducted by Harold E. Darke. The vocal soloists were Mrs. Charles Michie, Miss Nellie Robertson, The vocal Mr. S. V. Calder and Mr. Harry Child. Instrumental pieces were played by Miss Harkness and Mr. Darke (pianoforte), and Miss Albertha Flahey (violin). Mr. T. Ernest Murray accompanied, and Mr. John Cook efficiently conducted an enjoyable evening's music.

The Novello Choir gave its first concert on April 11 at Marlborough Hall. Consisting of over one hundred voices, the choir has grown out of an elementary singing-class formed by the staff of Messrs. Novello in 1906. The programme included Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' and a selection of part-songs. Mr. Charles Fry recited Longfellow's poem 'King Robert of Sicily,' with the music by Mr. John E. West. This was accompanied by the composer, the male voices of the choir singing the chard participant. the male voices of the choir singing the choral portion. ness and significance of his interpretations, fully explained the Miss Clara Butterworth sang with much charm of voice

Miss Olga Littleton contributed violin solos, and Mr. William Higley sang a number of songs. The Alexandra Male-Voice Quartet also sang. Dr. McNaught conducted, and Mr. Harold L. Brooke was the accompanist. There was an overwhelming audience.

The London Clarion Choir gave its second annual concert at Caxton Hall, Westminster, on April 11, when Gade's 'The Erl-king's daughter' was performed with full orchestral accompaniment, and a selection of unaccompanied part-songs, all of which were excellently rendered under the conductorship of Mr. Maskell Hardy. The solo vocalists were Miss Annie Swinfen, Miss Lilla Gordon and Mr. Robert Greir.

The Battersea Polytechnic Choral Society and Orchestra gave a performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' on April 11. The solo vocalists were Miss Florence Holderness, Miss Gladys Champion and Mr. Gwilym Richards. Mr. J. P. Attwater conducted.

A concert performance of German's opera 'Merrie England' was given on March 27 at St. Olave's Hall, Tooley Street, by the Musical Society connected with Messrs. Peek, Frean & Co., Ltd. The leading parts were sustained by the Misses Piggott, Ottway and Jarvis, and Messrs. Tillinghast and Mackey, Miss Hassam was at the pianoforte, and there was a well-balanced chorus of forty voices. With the exception of Mr. Langford Guest, who rendered valuable assistance at the Mustel organ, all the performers were drawn from the Company's staff. The excellence of the performance reflects great credit upon the conductor. Mr. performance reflects great credit upon the conductor, Mr. Tillinghast, and promises well for the future success of this new Society.

Purcell's opera 'Dido and Æneas' was given at the Queen's Gate Hall on April 2, under the direction of Miss Ethel Henry Bird, in aid of the Chelsea Hospital for Children, and a special interest attached to the performance, as it was in Chelsea, and for a school of young gentlewomen, that Purcell's opera 'Dido and Æneas' was first written more than 200 years ago. The work gains rather than loses by being presented on a modest scale, and the picturesque by being puch against which the little opera was enacted, the graceful grouping, and the capital singing and acting of the performers all combined to form a harmonious whole. Mr. Henry R. Bird directed an efficient orchestra and choir with his usual good judgment, and Miss Adeline Jones ably discharged the duties of pianist.

Suburban Concerts.

The Stroud Green Choral Association gave a performance of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' in St. Luke's Hall on April 2. The choir, conducted by Mr. H. J. Timothy, sang with spirit, and the principal solo vocalists were Miss Estella Linden, Miss Marie St. John Firth, Mr. Walter Heal and Mr. Arthur Walenn.

The second concert this season by the Streatham Choral Society took place in the Streatham Hall on April 6, when Coleridge Taylor's trilogy Scenes from the song of Hiawatha' was performed complete. The choral singing was marked by intelligence and good expression, and excellent support was afforded by a professional orchestra. The solo vocalists were Miss Ada Forrest, Mr. John Bardsley and Mr. George Uttley. Dr. Cuthbert Harris conducted.

The New Philharmonic Society of Richmond gave a performance of Sir Edward Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' on April 8, which reflected great credit upon the conductor, Mr. James Brown, and all concerned. The choir sang throughout with great intelligence, displaying power in the 'Chorus of Demons' and delicacy in the 'Angelic' choruses. The orchestra, largely composed of amateurs, played steadily and with good expression throughout. The solo vocalists were Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Alfred Heather and Mr. Greeves Johnson.

The St. Mary's Choral Society, Clapham, gave its second concert this season on April 10, when Sterndale Bennett's 'The May Queen' was performed, the soloists being Miss Euneta Truscott, Mrs. Florence Schumann, Mr. Alexander Webster and Mr. Bevington Rosse, and violinist, Mr. Rohan Clensy. The excellent attack and careful singing of the choir, both in the cantata and in Oliver King's part-song 'The sands o' Dee,' gave evidence of the earnest work of the conductor, Mr. Harold Harold.

Musical Competition Festivals.

BELFAST. March 21.

This competitive festival is at present organized by the Irish Temperance League, and is open only to supporters of the principles of the League. It is hoped and desired that in future the city will take up the scheme and throw it open to musical amateurs generally. The present festival was held in the fine Ulster Hall. This year there was a falling off in the adult choir entries, but the children's classes were very successful. St. Matthew's School, Ormeau Road and Hampton House were amongst the winners in various sections. The chief junior prize was a challenge shield, which was won by the Crescent Junior Choir under Miss E. Winnington. Another challenge shield for adult choirs fell to the Crescent Adult Choir under Mr. T. G. Lauchlan, this being the only entry. Dr. McNaught adjudicated.

The prizes were distributed by the Lord Mayor (Sir Robert Anderson), who made an interesting speech in favour of the movement. Mr. Herbert F. Ellingford brightened the evening's proceedings by some organ solos, and a welcome feature was the singing of the choir from the Cripples' Home, under Dr. Koeller.

South London.

This festival appeals mainly to the southern Metropolitan districts and generally to a radius within twelve miles of Charing Cross. It has, therefore, an immense field to work. The syllabus enumerates forty-three classes and comprehends numerous branches of musical study. The festival is promoted mainly by Mr. T. Lester Jones, who has secured the co-operation of many leading professors and active amateurs who are interested in the work.

The proceedings, held in the Battersea Town Hall, were spread over March 21, 23, 25, 26 and April 1. It was estimated that about 1,400 individuals took part in the competitions. There were large entries for the in the competitions. There were large entries for the pianoforte and solo-singing sections, and eighteen in the four choral sections. In the senior pianoforte class Miss Iredale V. Tydeman (Norwood) was successful. The following were the winning choirs in the chief choral sections: Mrs. Mary Layton's Choir; Clapham Wesleyan Church Choir (Mr. Wesley Hammet); Cormont Road Male-voice Choir (Mr. E. F. Dalton); Essendine Ladies' Choir (Mr. W. Kendall).

The adjudicators were Mr. Henry Bird, Mr. I. T. Field.

The adjudicators were Mr. Henry Bird, Mr. J. T. Field, Mr. Ernest Fowles, Mr. Alfred Gibson, Dr. G. F. Huntley, Mr. Alberto Randegger and Dr. A. Madeley Richardson. H.R.H. Princess Christian distributed the prizes on one of the days, and the Lord Chief Justice (Lord Alverstone) attended the final concert and spoke highly of the results

Douglas, Isle of Man.

The seventeenth festival here was held with unprecedented success on March 25, 25 and 26. The standard of musical attainment, especially as to the execution of choral music, is very high on the Island. Mr. Looney's choir holds both the Blackpool and Morecambe challenge shields, yet on this occasion his famous choir was placed second in the chief class, Mr. Poulter's choir gaining the victory by five marks. The test-pieces in this class were a selection from the cantata 'The power of sound' (Somervell), and the well-known part-song 'The lullaby of life' (Leslie). In another choral section Mr. Looney's Peel Choir was successful.

The Douglas Pupil Teachers' Choir, under Miss M. L. Wood, gained the prize for four-part sight-singing. There was a large number of solo singers, and a few schools contributed choirs.

An enormous audience attended the final evening concert. The combined choirs sang the cantata, 'The power of sound' (Somervell), under Mr. Acton, and the prize-winners contributed performances of their test-pieces. Mr. Harry Wood's orchestra was a welcome feature in accompanying the cantata and in other directions. Lord Ragian (the Governor) distributed the prizes. The secretary of the festival is Mrs. Laughton, and to the untiring efforts of this lady much of the success of the scheme is due.

The adjudicators were Mr. John Acton (Manchester), Mr. T. Tertius Noble (York Minster) and Mr. C. R. Fogg (Manchester).

LONDON WORKING GIRLS' UNION.

The twenty-first annual competition of the London Working Girls' Union was held at the City of London School on March 28. There were fourteen entries in the two classes. The test-pieces in the advanced class were Mackenzie's trio 'Waken' and Purcell's 'In these delightful, pleasant groves,' and a third piece left to the choice of each competing choir. A two-part sight-test was also imposed. Much of the singing was surprisingly good. St. Mary's, Borough (Mr. Harvey Grace), won a victory by one mark over St. Edward's (Mr. William Holmes). Both of these finely-trained choirs chose Dr. Vaughan Williams's beautiful trio 'Sound sleep' as their special piece. In the junior division the tests were 'When roses fall asleep' (Virginia Gabriel), a piece left to the selection of each choir, and a unison sight-singing test. The Roehampton Club (Mr. W. G. Rothery) was first, and Walworth (Mr. Long) second. Dr. McNaught adjudicated, and Dr. G. F. Huntley conducted a combined performance of the choirs.

STRATFORD AND EAST LONDON.

This old-established festival having grown so greatly, it was this year found necessary to apportion seven days for its operations. The dates were March 28, 30, 31 and April 1, 2, 4 and 11. The meeting on March 31 was held at Canning Town, all the other meetings taking place at Stratford Town Hall, both places being in the far East.

The festival, as usual, drew a great number of individual instrumental performers, 263 entries being received in the pianoforte solo classes, and forty-five in the violin-playing class. In the various choral contests there were forty-one entries, of which eighteen were school choirs. The contests for vocal soloists attracted 242 entries. The following were the chief results: Gold medal solo-singing class for former the chief results: Gold medal solo-singing class for former prize-winners, Miss Ethel Dyer and Mr. Alexander Bannister; senior pianoforte class, Miss Beatrice Mutch; gold medal violin playing class, Mr. Fred. W. Simmons. The chief choral class, which was open, brought forward only four choirs, the victory falling to the Willesden District Choir (Mr. J. S. Waddell). The test-pieces were Callcott's 'Once upon my cheek' and a piece left to the choirs' own choice, which in the winner's case was Oliver King's 'Soldier yeat'. Another choral class for local choirs also 'Soldier, rest.' Another choral class for local choirs also drew four entries, Mr. G. Day-Winter's choir gaining the first place. The prescribed test was Macfarren's 'Break, break,' and Mr. Winter's own-choice piece, Henry Leslie's 'Lullaby of life.' Madame Grace Day-Winter's choir was successful in the contest for female-voice choirs.

The school choirs were divided into three sections and in all there were seventeen entries. Each choir had to sing a prescribed piece and one of its own choice, and a sight-test (whether in unison or in parts was not stated) was optional. The Farmer Road, Leyton, School gained first places in two sections, and the Hornchurch Mixed School were first in another section.

The adjudicators were: Mr. H. L. Balfour, Mr. Oscar Beringer, Mr. Sydney Blakiston, Dr. Percy C. Buck, Mr. A. L. Cowley, Mr. Ernest Fowles, Madame Agnes Larkcom, Mr. George Oakey, Sir Walter Parratt, Mr. Arthur W. Payne and Mr. Daniel Price. At the concerts given by the prize-winners on Saturday, April 11, the prizes were distributed by the Duchess of Marlborough and the Lord Chief Justice (Lord Alverstone). Mr. J. Graham, whose experience in competitive festival organization is probably unique, is still the hard-worked secretary.

TYNEDALE (HEXHAM).

This countryside event, which took place on April 3 and 4, is very usefully stimulating the district to which it appeals. Twenty-five places sent seventeen school choirs and seventeen adult choirs, besides quartets. In the chief choral class the winner was Bywell Choral Society (Mr. J. Walton), the tests being Wilbye's madrigal 'Sweet honey-sucking bees' and Bantock's 'Evening has lost her throne.' This is the third time Mr. Walton's choir has won the shield offered in this class. In the class for choral societies from small villages the tests were Dr. Wood's 'Full fathom five' and Elgar's 'As torrents in summer,' Ovingham Choir (Mr. John Walton) proving the winner. The challenge shield class for schools was won by Ryton Thorp (Mr. J. Weatherley). Dr. H. P. Allen adjudicated, and conducted a performance of 'Phaudrig Crohoore' (Stanford) given by the combined adult choirs, and 'A garland of song' (McNaught) given by the combined children.

DOVE AND CHURNET VALLEYS, ASHBOURNE (DERBYSHIRE).

This new festival established a remarkable record. It was mooted only in January this year, and many persons who attended a meeting summoned in that month by Lady Florence Duncombe, deemed it impossible to stir the neighbourhood sufficiently to justify the holding of a festival this year. But it was fixed for April 9, and very soon the promoters were embarrassed by entries involving 800 competitors. As there were no public rooms in Ashbourne large enough to accommodate even half this number, it was found necessary to erect a marquee large enough to hold a thousand persons.

Seventeen villages and small towns sent five junior choirs, nine for female voices, six for men's voices, fifteen church choirs, fifteen choral societies and eight mixed-voice quartets. The business of assessing the claims of all these competitors occupied Dr. McNaught (the adjudicator) for many hours. The enthusiasm and interest were great. The singing was often quite excellent, and even where it could not be so described, zeal and earnestness were apparent. It had been proclaimed that the competitions were not merely for the already efficient, but to help and stimulate the inefficient. Mayfield Church and Mayfield Wesleyan both sent highly-trained choirs. In the hymn and chant competition, the former gained only one more mark than the latter. The Mayfield Choral Society was victorious in the chief mixed-voice and the male-voice choir sections. There were several lady conductors, and Lady Florence Duncombe had the pleasure of leading her Ellastone Choir to victory in the small village class. All the children's choirs sang sweetly and well in tune. Doveridge came out first, but the other choirs were very little behind.

A concert given in the evening drew a large audience and gave great satisfaction. A sound-board erected over the platform helped to mitigate the inevitable unsatisfactory acoustic properties of the tent.

On the whole, the promoters of the scheme have every reason to be highly gratified with the results of their well-directed efforts. Much of the success of the event was owing to the management of Mr. G. Bull, M.D., the honorary secretary of this promising movement.

WANSBECK (MORPETH).

This festival was held on April 10 and 11 with gratifying success. All classes but one were for vocal performers, the exception being a class for pianoforte accompanying at sight. Ten villages and small towns sent school choirs, and the same number sent numerous choirs of various kinds. In all there were 82 entries. Many of the children's choirs gained high praise from Mr. T. Tertius Noble, who adjudicated on both days. Netherwitton School (Lieut.-Col. Orde) and Rothbury Girls (Miss Mearns) each gained a challenge shield. On the day for adults Bebaide gained a challenge cup in the village class, the tests being Lee Williams's popular part-song 'The song of the pedlar,' and in the chief choral class Rothbury again, under Lieut.-Col. Orde, was the victor. It is worthy of note that the prizes consisted of only challenge shields, a cup, medals and certificates.

LIVERPOOL.

A successful competitive musical festival for children was held in the Central Hall on April 11, when there were over 900 entries for the various contests, the adjudicators being Dr. Arthur Somervell, Mr. Harry Evans and Mr. Hartwell Jones. The Rhos juvenile choir under Mr. Jacob Edwards gained the chief prize.

The new competitive festival for East London will be held at the People's Palace on May 9, 14, 15 and 16. The entries are very large, no fewer than a hundred choirs having promised to appear. At the evening concert on May 16 the Princess Victoria of Schleswig Holstein will distribute the prizes, and Miss Muriel Foster (Mrs. Goetz) has promised to temporarily quit her regretted retirement in order to sing. Sir Walter Parratt, M.V.O., will conduct. The honorary secretary is Miss Edith Barran, 20, Queensberry Place, S.W.

The Morecambe Festival, to be held on May 13 to 16, promises to be a great success. There are enormous entries. On the children's day (May 13) Dr. Walford Davies's new children's cantata 'Humpty Dumpty,' to Lewis Carroll's words, will be performed under the direction of the composer. On the final 'open' day forty-one choirs from many parts of the country will compete. Even places so distant as Newcastle, Birmingham, Belfast and London will be represented. Full programmes can be obtained from the secretary, Mr. H. Powell, Musical Festival Office, Morecambe.

The Association of Musical Competition Festivals will hold its annual conference at Broadwood's on Wednesday, July 8, at 10.30 a.m. The chair will be taken in turn by Miss Wakefield, the Marchioness of Salisbury, and Lady Mabel Howard. On May 7 a meeting of the newly-instituted Council will be held, also at Broadwood's, at 11 a.m. Mr. W. H. Leslie (Broadwood's, Conduit Street, W.), is the treasurer, and Miss Wakefield and Dr. McNaught are the secretaries.

The Barrow-in-Furness festival will be held in November. Mrs. Walch (of Walch & Pohl, the music dealers) has presented the festival with a challenge trophy, value one hundred guineas.

In the report of the Carlisle Musical Festival given in our last issue, p. 251, it should have been stated that the Carlisle Glee Union (Mr. W. C. Darley) won the first place in the male-voice choir class; also that Mr. Theodore (not Thomas) Walrond is the conductor of the St. Cuthbert's choristers and honorary secretary of the festival.

The Barnstaple Musical Festival Society held its jubilee festival on April 22. Dr. H. J. Edwards's oratorio 'The risen Lord' was given with much success in the afternoon, and in the evening Sullivan's 'The Golden Legend' was performed. The principal vocalists were Miss Esta D'Argo, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. Alfred Heather and Mr. Charles Knowles. Previous to the afternoon performance the freedom of Barnstaple was conferred on Dr. Edwards, who has successfully conducted the Society's performances for many years.

The seventh and last of the Queen's College chamber concerts took place on March 26, the quartet consisting of Miss W. Burnett and Messrs. George Vincent, T. Barrett and William Warburton (the first two of Belfast and the last of Manchester). Miss Florence Macnaughton, of Belfast, was the vocalist, and sang most artistically two songs by Debussy and three by Albert Mallinson. Two of the earlier quartets of Beethoven, one of them with Mr. F. H. Sawyer (Belfast) as pianist, Tartini's Sonata in G by Miss W. Burnett, and three pieces for the violoncello played by Mr. Warburton, formed the rest of the interesting programme.

The Birmingham Festival Choral Society concluded its current series of concerts at the Town Hall on April 2 with one of the finest renderings yet heard here of Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius,' at least as regards the choral portion of the work, although exception might be taken to the hurried way in which the Demons' chorus was delivered. The splendid tone-quality of the choir was otherwise strongly marked throughout the work, and in the way of phrasing and gradation of light and shade the singing showed admirable preparation on the part of the conductor, Dr. G. R. Sinclair, and the assistant chorus-master, Mr. Allen K. Blackall. The soloists were Mr. Gervase Elwes, Miss Marie Stuart (who gave a dramatic and emotional reading of the Angel) and Mr. Herbert Brown. Wesley's magnificent eight-part motet 'In exitu Israel,' with which the concert began, was sung in a manner that fairly electrified the large audience, and showed what the choir can accomplish in unaccompanied part-music. The orchestra is entitled to much praise for its excellent work, and Mr. C. W. Perkins ably presided at the organ.

The Birmingham Choral Union revived at the Town Hall on March 28, Sullivan's oratorio 'The Light of the World,' originally written for, and produced with great success at our festival of 1873. It was well received by a popular Saturday night audience, and justified its revival if only to show the difference in style and workmanship of the older form of oratorio and the new. Mr. Thomas Facer conducted an excellent performance, chorus and orchestra completely realizing the characteristic features of the work. The solo parts were taken with conspicuous ability by Miss Maggie Jaques, Miss Fanny Peters, Miss Mabel Botwood (a new and promising local contralto), Mr. W. Trevor Evans and Mr. Charles Tree. The organ part was in the capable hands of Mr. C. W. Perkins, whose appointment, by the way, as professor of the organ at the Royal Academy of Music has been greatly appreciated by musical circles in Birmingham.

The Birmingham City Choral Society gave its third and last concert of the season at the Town Hall on April 7, under Mr. Thomas Beecham's conductorship. The concert, like its predecessors, was too long, and the last item, César Franck's Psalm cxl., was sung to empty benches. The chief choral work consisted of Haydn's 'Spring,' from 'The Seasons,' its idyllic freshness and melodious character being vividly brought out by chorus and orchestra, while able support was given in the solo parts by Miss Leonora Sparkes, Mr. Henry Boulderson and Mr. Arthur Winckworth. The novelty of the evening was Mr. Joseph Holbrooke's setting of Keats's poem 'Byron,' conducted by the composer. It created an excellent impression, and proved the success of the evening. Choir and orchestra, together with the conductor, imparted to this remarkably fine composition the right colour and temperament.

At the seventh and last concert of the Birmingham Orchestral Concerts Society, given in the Town Hall on March 25, the Queen's Hall Orchestra, with Mr. Henry J. Wood as conductor, supplemented by local players, played Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony, Wagner's 'Vorspiel und Liebestod' from 'Tristan and Isolde,' and Debussy's 'L'après-midi d'un Faune.' Mrs. Henry J. Wood was the vocalist.

The Sutton Coldfield Society gave one of the best concerts since its foundation at the Sutton Coldfield Town Hall on March 26. The first part of the programme was devoted to Handel's 'Acis and Galatea,' the principal parts being taken by Miss Mary Lund, Mr. Joseph Cheetham and Mr. Tom Howell. Much pains had been taken by Mr. Joseph H. Adams, the conductor of the Society, in the preparation of the work, and the performance showed the result of careful training.

The Birmingham Symphony Orchestra concluded its series of Saturday night popular concerts on April 11, the Town of Saturday night popular concerts on April 11, the Town Hall on that occasion being crowded to overflowing. Mr. Halford conducted with his customary ability, and secured a fine reading of two movements of Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony, the '1812 Overture,' and Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' march. An undoubted success was achieved by a young contraito, Miss Lucy Nuttall, who possesses a voice of remarkable richness and maturity, while her singing betrays natural temperament and feeling.

The Royal Society of Artists' musical matinées in connection with the Spring exhibition of pictures, opened on April 11 with a pianoforte recital given by Mr. Arthur Cooke. The programme included Schubert's Fantasia 'Der Wanderer,' Schumann's 'Etudes Symphoniques,' and some Chopin and Liszt pieces. Mr. Cooke never played better than on this occasion.

The West Bromwich Choral Society gave a good concert performance of Gounod's 'Faust' at the West Bromwich Town Hall on March 11. The executive numbered Ioo performers, the band and choir being auminatory balanced. The principal parts were ably sustained by Miss Nellie Finch, Mr. Frank Mullings, Miss Amy Cooke, Miss May Farmer, Mr. E. Darby, Mr. Hall Rose, and Mr. Sam Bishop, of Exeter Cathedral. Mr. Julius Harrison presided at the organ and Mr. Arthur Cooke conducted with his customary ability. The choir gave 100 performers, the band and choir being admirably evidence of considerable progress in their singing, realizing a good tone, with precision and attack. It is most gratifying to know that choral societies in this neighbourhood are showing such signs of prosperity and musical alertness.

The Midland Musical Society's annual Good Friday performance of Gounod's 'The Redemption' attracted a crowded audience to the Town Hall on April 17. Under Mr. A. J. Cotton's able conductorship an all-round excellent rendering was given, the singing of the chorus being characterized by volume of tone and due observation of light and shade. The principal parts were admirably sustained by Madame Amy Kendal, Miss Kathleen Miller, Miss Edith Draper, Mr. Frank Mullings, Mr. H. Bannister and Mr. H. Downing. Mr. W. F. Newey was the organist.

On March 12 the Clifton Quintet gave a concert at the Victoria Rooms, a notice of which, I regret to say, was inadvertently omitted from my last letter. The players were Messrs. Maurice Alexander and Hubert Hunt (violins), Ernest Lane (viola), Percy Lewis (violoncello), and Herbert Parsons (pianoforte). Considerable interest was manifested in the Quintet in A minor (Op. 12), by the Russian composer Vitézslav Novák, a pleasing production, the Andante in particular gaining the suffrages of the audience. Mr. Hubert Hunt contributed with acceptance a Romance and Hungarian Dance by Rachmaninov, and Mr. Herbert Parsons performed effectively two compositions by Liszt. The String quartet in A minor (Op. 51, No. 2) of Brahms was admirably executed. Miss Eleanor Felix was the vocalist at this enjoyable and artistic concert.

The Ladies' Night of the Society of Bristol Gleemen on March 25 attracted a large audience to the Victoria Rooms. One subject for regret was that the conductor of the Society, Mr. Walter J. Kidner, although present, was unable to direct the performance. Mr. C. W. Stear (organist at the Church of the Holy Nativity, and organist and choirmaster of the Grammar School) conducted with ability. An interesting programme of favourite part-music, &c., was excellently interpreted, and at intervals Miss Phyllis Lett gave songs with much charm, the accompanist being Mr.

Albert H. Tocknell.

At the popular concert in the Victoria Rooms on March 28 the vocalists were Miss Eveline Gerrish and Mr. Charles 'Knowles, who experienced a very hearty reception. The and Mr. William Harrison (violin).

band (Mr. Harold Bernard being principal violin), composed of the Society of Instrumentalists with professionals, interpreted several compositions in an effective manner, all those in the first part of the concert being by Grieg. Mr. Riseley conducted the performance with skill.

The City Road Choir on April 1 gave its eighteenth annual concert in the Lecture Hall, Upper York Street, under the direction of Mr. Arthur E. Allis. Miss Eva Santley, Miss Ada Bennett and Mr. Arthur Mass were the solo vocalists, and several attractive compositions were given by the choir. There were also performances by Mr. Pearce Clarke (violin), Mr. Sydney Jones (flute) and Mr. W. S. Palmer (pianoforte). The varied programme was much appreciated, as evinced by the applause with which the different pieces were received.

The choir of St. Saviour's Church on April 4 gave a concert at Redland Park Hall in the presence of a numerous audience. Mr. G. Herbert Riseley (organist of the church) directed a performance which included vocal solos by Miss Mr. Percy Heming. At intervals Mr. Matter Heal and Mr. Percy Heming. At intervals Mr. Maurice Alexander, with his accustomed ability, gave some pieces on the violin.

There was a large attendance at the Association Hall,

St. James's Square, on April 8, when the Young Men's Christian Association Choral Society gave a concert under the direction of Mr. Arnold Barter. The principal vocalists were Miss Maude Waite, Mr. George Brierley and Mr. Harry Miller. Choir and orchestra (led by Mr. Harold Bernard) numbered ninety performers. In the first part of the concert Smart's cantata 'The Bride of Dunkerron' was carefully presented, and in the miscellaneous selection which followed the instrumental pieces were 'La Jeunesse d'Hercule' (Saint-Saens), Ballade in A minor (Coleridge-Taylor), Vorspiel to 'Loreley' (Max Bruch), and the overture

Two concerts organized by the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants were held on April 17 at Colston Hall.

The Bristol Harmonic Choir, under the direction of Mr. J. Jenkins, gave several favourite part-songs, and the Bristol and Clifton Orchestral Society, under the direction of Mr. E. Pavey, ably interpreted Mozart's 'Jupiter' symphony, Mendelssohn's 'Reformation' symphony and other compositions. Mr. Vernon Pierson contributed some flute solos, and the solo vocalists were Miss Ethel Duthoit, Miss Pauline Allen and Mr. Barry Lindon.

One of the most interesting concerts of the season was given on March 28 by the University of Dublin Choral Society — better known as the 'College Choral'—when Bach's B minor Mass was performed in Dublin for the first time. It is to be regretted that such an important event was not open to the general public, the tickets for these concerts being only obtainable by the members of the Society. The choruses were sung with an enthusiasm which was most praiseworthy, and with a certainty of attack which reflected the utmost credit on the members of the chorus as well as on the conductor, Mr. Charles J. Marchant. The solos and duets were well sung by members of the Society, but suffered from the absence of the organ accompaniment, or its equivalent, though the orchestra, under Mr. Arthur Darley's leadership, played its part well. However, with such an extremely good choral performance, which is the most important part of this great work, it is hypercritical to look for blemishes elsewhere.

On April 7 the Leinster School of Music gave a concert in the Antient Concert Rooms, when one of the chief items was Beethoven's fourth Symphony, conducted by Mr. S. Myerscough, principal of the School.

The North City Choral Society (conductor, Mr. George Harrison) gave a concert in the Rotunda on April 6. The choir sang with good effect a miscellaneous selection of part-songs, and Mr. Joseph O'Mara created quite a sensation by his fine singing of Wagner's 'Prize song' from 'Die Meistersinger,' and other songs. The other solo vocalists were Miss Jeannie McCullagh and Mr. J. C. Browner, and the instrumental soloists wese Miss Annie Lord (pianoforte)

On April 2 the Philharmonic Society (conductor, Mr. Charles J. Marchant) gave its first concert with orchestral accompaniment: the second of its first season. The work selected was Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus.' A large choir sang the choral portions well, and a small band provided a fairly adequate accompaniment. The soloists were Miss Agnes Tracey (soprano), Mr. Dan Jones (tenor), and the following members of the Society: Miss Goodbody (soprano), Miss Keatinge (contralto), and Mr. Robert Wilson (baritone).

The Dublin Orchestral Society gave the third concert for this season at the Royal University Buildings on April 13, when Dr. Esposito conducted a very fine performance of Beethoven's C minor Symphony. Mr. Clyde Twelvetrees played beautifully Tchaikovsky's 'Rococo' variations for violoncello and orchestra. The programme included Vincent D'Indy's 'Fervaal' prelude and Wagner's 'Siegfried's journey to the Rhine,' Saint-Saëns's 'Danse Macabre' and Berlioz's dramatic arrangement of the Rakoczy March.

On April 14, the Dublin Oratorio Society gave a concert in the Theatre Royal to an immense audience. Rossini's 'Stabat Mater,' a short selection from Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion, a chorus from 'The Messiah,' an 'Easter Hymn' for tenor solo and chorus, composed by the conductor of the Society, Mr. Vincent O'Brien (which proved to be a melodious and attractive work), and some miscellaneous solos made up a somewhat 'variety' programme. Mr. Vincent O'Brien conducted the large chorus and orchestra, the latter being led by Mr. Arthur Darley. The principal soloists were Miss Amy Castles, Mrs. Scarff-Goodman, Countess Maffei, Mr. John F. McCormack and Mr. William

The entries for the various competitions in connection with the Feis Ceoil, Irish Musical Festival, to be held between May 18 and 23 are in excess of last year, and promise a successful festival week. The adjudicators are Dr. A. H. Mann, Mr. E. Gordon Cleather, Mr. Hans Wessely, Mr. Oscar Beringer and Mr. A. J. Dunn, bandmaster of the Royal Irish Fusiliers.

Mr. Robert Burnett, accompanied by Mr. Martin Hobkirk, was the vocalist, and delighted the audience by his finished renderings of songs by various composers.

The Edinburgh Western Choral Society-Mr. Gavin Godfrey, conductor—gave its annual concert on April 1. Gade's 'The Erl-King's daughter,' a choral selection from 'Tannhauser' and some part-songs were sung with a praiseworthy degree of steadiness and fulness of tone. The soloists were Miss Maie Thom, Miss Nina Horsburgh and Mr. George Campbell, and the accompaniments were

The Edinburgh Philharmonic Society, a new choral organization conducted by Dr. W. B. Ross, made its first appearance in public in Queen's Hall on April 2. First performances in Edinburgh were given of Elgar's 'Black Knight' and Parry's 'Pied Piper of Hamelin.' The singing of the choir gave much pleasure to the audience, and judging of the choir gave much pleasure to the audience, and, judging from the success of its inaugural concert, the Society should soon take an important position in the musical life of the city. Further attractions were songs by Miss Nina Horsburgh, Mr. W. S. Hamilton and Mr. John Burnett, in addition to violin solos by Miss Alix Young and violoncello solos by Mr. Max Hochstein.

Amongst other events may be noted a violoncello recital (March 23) by Mr. John Linden, assisted by Miss Ethel Armit (vocalist) and Mr. George Short accompanist. The third annual concert of the Morningside Amateur Orchestral Society (March 26), conducted by Mr. Robert Cumming. The Orpheus Amateur Orchestral Society's concert (March 27), conductor, Mr. Charles D. Beswick; vocalists, Miss Ethel Armit and Mr. T. Scott Macpherson; and violinist, Miss Grant. A pianoforte recital (April 2) by Mr. David Bayne, assisted by Mr. Colin Mackenzie, violinist, and Mr. George Campbell, vocalist. The Edinburgh Choral Union Advanced Class concert (April 4), conductor, Mr. James Dowie. The Edinburgh Amateur Orchestral Society's concluding concert of its thirty-sixth season (April 6), conductor, Mr. T. H. Collinson; vocalist, Miss H. K. Macfie; and solo violinist, Miss Alix Young.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Young Men's Christian Association Choir gave a most praiseworthy rendering of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' on April 8. The choruses were sung with great vigour and precision, and of the soloists, Misses Jenny Young and A. McAlpine and Messrs. J. F. S. Adams and Walter Harvey, Miss Young merits a special word of praise. The accompaniments were supplied by Mr. Cole's band, with Mr. W. J. Clapperton at the organ, and Mr. R. L. Reid conducted the performance with great energy.

On April 9 another excellent performance of 'Elijah' was given by the Hamilton Choral Society under the experienced direction of Mr. T. S. Drummond. The solo music was sung by Misses Cross and McAlpine and Messrs. Martin and Burnett, and the accompaniments were effectively played by an orchestra led by Mr. E. R. Joachim, with Mr. J. E. Hodgson as organist. On the same evening the Glasgow Teachers' Choral Society, a recently-formed body drawn from the class-teachers in the district, made its first public appearance. The new choir is fairly well balanced, the soprano section being particularly good, and in the future this new organization may accomplish much good choral work. The programme comprised Stanford's 'The Revenge' and some miscellaneous part-songs, the latter showing the choir at its best. Mr. Alec Steven conducted, and the accompaniments were played by Miss May Thomson.

The Glasgow Bach Choir, under Mr. J. M. Diack, gave an impressive rendering of the 'St. Matthew' Passion in the cathedral on April 15. The choir sang the choral numbers with much intelligence, and the chorales, sung in a numbers with much intelligence, and the chorales, sung in a distant part of the building, were most effective if not quite Bach-like. The solo vocalists, Misses Jenny Taggart and Maud Santley, and Messrs. Henry Brearley, Herbert Brown and Hutton Malcolm, sang their solos excellently. Mr. Verbrugghen played the violin solo in 'Have mercy upon me,' and a choir of boys from St. Mary's Cathedral sang the ripieno chorale in 'Come, ye daughters.' Mr. Herbert Walton's sympathetic organ accompaniments deserve full recognition. A performance of this noble work in the cathedral will probably become an annual event.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Elgar's 'The Apostles' was heard under highly favourable conditions at the concert given by the Liverpool Welsh Choral Union on March 28, when Mr. Harry Evans directed a noble performance of this work—a performance which was the outcome of a thorough knowledge of the score, a thorough and complete preparation of its choral and instrumental difficulties, and an appreciation of the scope of the music which was communicated to the singers and players in no uncertain way. The oratorio made a deep impression on a crowded audience, who refrained from applause until the end. Intensity and enthusiasm are invariable features in the singing of the Welsh Choral Union, and on this occasion restraint and expression were added in a marked degree. The principal vocalists were Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. John Harrison, Mr. Frederic Austin, Mr. David Evans and Mr. Herbert Brown, the latter singing the part of Judas for the first time with conspicuous Mr. Akeroyd led the augmented orchestra, which lacked nothing in efficiency.

At the fourth of the Schiever chamber concerts on March 28, special interest was taken in the début of a young Liverpool lady, Miss Myrta Stubbs, who played the piano-forte part in Sinding's E minor Quintet with considerable skill and evident musical feeling. In her solos she was less successful in Brahms's Rhapsody in G minor than in pieces of lighter calibre, Chopin's F major study, a new Prelude by Rachmaninoff, and an original valse which showed some fancy. The string players, led by Mr. Schiever, were favourably heard in Débussy's Quartet in G minor (Op. 10).

The Philharmonic Society devoted its twelfth and closing concert of the season on March 24 to Parry's 'Judith, of which an excellent performance was conducted by Dr. F. H. Cowen, with Madame Agnes Nicholls, Madame Ada Crossley, Mr. Gervase Elwes, Mr. Ivor Foster and two boys (Masters Hall and Baines) of the Liverpool Cathedral choir as the vocal principals.

An important choral combination, the Methodist Choral Union, conducted by Mr. Percival Ingram, gave a successful performance of Smart's 'Bride of Dunkerron' on April 4. The revival of this interesting work proved that its qualities of definite form and melodic beauty are of the enduring order. Adequate principals were engaged in Miss Olive Clare, Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. Herbert Brown, and there was an efficient small orchestra led by Mr. John Lawson. Among the miscellaneous items of the second part were Elgar's chorus 'The Challenge of Thor' and Sullivan's 'Ogladsome light,' which was extremely well sung.

The theory of teaching our old folk-songs and national airs to the children of our elementary schools, so strenuously advocated by Mr. Cecil J. Sharp, has been carried out in a practical and interesting way by the Rev. Father Burge, of St. Austin's, whose operetta 'The King of the Cannibal Islands,' which contains many familiar old airs, was very well sung and acted in costume by a choir of about forty children who had been excellently trained. Several performances were given, one notably good being heard in the hall of the large training-college in Mount Pleasant, where there is a

The Blundellsands Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. Ernst Schiever, at its concert on April 2 played an interesting work, 'Idyll,' for stringed orchestra, in four movements, by Dr. James Lyon, the accomplished organist of Wallasey Parish Church, who has lately been turning his attention to the composition of orchestral music with considerable success.

The programmes of the Societa Armonica are invariably of high aim, and at its 144th concert on April 8 this large and devoted body of instrumentalists-which comprises the best local amateur players, leavened by professional leaders—essayed with fair success the 'Leonora' Overture (No. 3), Dvorák's fourth Symphony in G, and two short movements from Sibelius's incidental music to 'Pelleas and Melisande,' ('At a spring in the park' and 'At the castle gate'). One of the first violins of the orchestra, Miss Dorothy Ravenscroft, played Saint-Saëns's Violin concerto No. 3, in B minor, which she had evidently studied with appreciation of its difficulties. The vocalist was Miss Mary Turner, who sang Mozart's 'Deh vieni' with acceptance and Verdi's 'Ernani involami.'

The Birkenhead Choral Society, which continues to benefit under the training of Mr. Harry Evans, sang Elgar's 'King Olaf' very well at its concert on April 4, when Miss Edina Thraves, a bright young soprano, Mr. John Bardsley and Mr. F. Roberts were associated in the solo music. A smaller Birkenhead Society, the Oxton Harmonic, made a suitable choice in Sullivan's Festival 'Te Deum,' which with other music it sang under the direction of Mr. H. E. Hunt on April 6.

Sir Charles Santley attended a reception and banquet given in his honour by the Liverpool section of the Incorporated Society of Musicians on April 11. At the reception the Schiever Quartet played, and Sir Charles sang an air by Paer, 'The Rosary,' 'To Anthea' and 'Simon the cellarer.' The composer of the latter immortal ditty was another miner.' eminent Liverpudlian, John Liptrot Hatton, to whom Sir Charles, in his after-dinner speech, suggested the erection of a memorial. Professor J. C. Bridge was in the chair.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The season which has now closed has of course been nade memorable, as well as interesting, in that through it we have celebrated the Jubilee of the Hallé concerts; our pride in which, if justified by art, is warmed by the intimacy of lengthened historical associations. The programme of the Brodsky Quartet concert on March 26, contained Verdi's one and only example of chamber music, the Quartet in E minor-interesting at least from the fact that it appeared for the first time in the repertory of the Brodsky Quartet. Brahms's beautiful Pianoforte quartet in C minor (Op. 60) followed, with Mr. Willibald Richter at the pianoforte. Mr. Carl Fuchs made worthy use of his opportunity in the lovely Andante movement, which was exquisitely played. Beethoven's Quartet in A (Op. 18, No. 5), concluded the concert.

As the result of a plébiscite 'The Flying Dutchman' and 'Oberon' overtures, two movements from the 'Pathetic symphony, the ballet music from 'Sylvia' (Delibes), and the 'Siegfried Idyll,' found their places in the programme of the last Promenade concert on March 28. To the foregoing pieces must be added Bach's Concerto for two violins, in D minor, played by Mr. Simon Speelman, the conductor, and Mr. John Nichols, the leader, Dr. Brodsky conducting; and a Romance for viola and orchestra, composed by Mr. Mauritz Speelman, the solo instrument played by his brother, Mr. Simon Speelman. Miss Effie Thomas was the solo vocalist.

The students of the Royal Manchester College of Music, on March 30, gave their annual platform performance in opera in the Whitworth Hall of the University, the work selected being Nicolai's 'Merry Wives of Windsor.' The soloists had easy command of their tasks, and their singing was, I think, the best I have heard at any similar performance. formance. Dr. Brodsky, the principal, conducted. Miss Lemmens-Sherrington is the teacher of the opera class.

The programme of the final concert of the Vocal Society was miscellaneous, ranging from Wilbye's five-part madrigal, 'Sweet honey-sucking bees,' to a part-song entitled 'Life,' by Mr. Richard Knight, a local composer who exhibits in this, as in other efforts, a distinct instinct for vocal chamber music. Dr. Henry Watson's choir gave a remarkably fine rendering of Cornelius's 'Surrender of the soul.'
The students of Mr. Albert J. Cross's School of Music

made a courageous if not completely successful attempt at stage performances of opera at the Gaiety Theatre during the week commencing March 30. The operas chosen were week commencing March 30. The operas chosen were Bizet's 'Djamileh'; Mascagni's 'Cavalleria Rusticana'; and Meyerbeer's 'Star of the North.' On April 20 the Carl Rosa Company commenced a week's engagement here with a capable performance of Gounod's 'Faust.

On April 4, Professor Ebenezer Prout attracted a crowded audience to a meeting of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, before whom he lectured with his wonted enthusiasm on 'Bach as a vocal writer.' The vocal illustrations—chiefly selected from the cantatas—were ably sung by Miss Betty Booker and Mr. Francis Harford, the professor accompanying.

I should not like to omit all mention of the concert at the Town Hall on March 26, given by the choirs of the Manchester and Salford Girls' Institute. The members are all working girls, and under the earnest tuition and conductorship of Miss Ashworth they sing with remarkable finish as well as with inspiring zest. It would not be easy to estimate the leavening influence which Miss Ashworth and her classes are exerting just where that influence is most needed and most appreciated.

The first performance of Elgar's 'Caractacus' in South Shields was given by the South Shields Choral Society on March 25, under the direction of Mr. M. Fairs. The choir was more successful than on previous occasions, but greater attention is needed to light and shade. The soloists were Miss Ethel Wood, Messrs. Lloyd Chandos, Stewart Gardner and Robert Burnett. An interesting item on the programme was Sibelius's 'Karelia' Suite. On the same evening the Philharmonic Society of the adjoining town, Jarrow, performed Smart's 'The Bride of Dunkerron.' Mr. George Dodds conducted, and Miss J. Taggart and Messrs. W. Burrows and C. Knowles were the solo vocalists.

The Auckland Musical Society, under Mr. N. Kilburn, gave 'Elijah' on April 1, and on the following evening 'The Hymn of Praise' (without trombones!) and Beethoven's seventh Symphony were performed by the Stockton and Thornaby Choral and Orchestral Society under the baton of Mr. A. Wilson.

The Northumberland Orchestral Society (Mr. C. Horsley) gave its annual concert on April 3. Weber's 'Euryanthe' overture and Saint-Saëns's 'Algeria' suite were nicely played, but the performance of Mendelssohn's 'Scotch' Symphony lacked distinction and proved monotonous.

A capital programme of unaccompanied vocal music was submitted by the Newcastle Postal Telegraph Choral Society at its concert on April 8, when 'I wrestle and pray' (J. C. Bach), 'The tempest' (Cornelius), 'Folk-song variations' (Rutland Boughton) and madrigals and part-songs by Morley, Gibbons, Wilbye, Lee Williams, Elgar, Parry, and Charles Wood were sung. Mr. Edgar L. Bainton conducted and Mr. Perry played the first movement of Tchaikovsky's Violin concerto.

The performance of Bach's B minor Mass by the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union is separately noticed on p. 323.

The Stapleford Choral Society gave a successful performance of Haydn's 'Creation' and Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer' on March 24. Miss Sara Spence, Mr. Harry Hartley and Mr. Alfred Winterbotham were the solo vocalists. Mr. George Spencer ably conducted, and Mr. Frederick Wyatt rendered good service at the organ.

The season of the Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society terminated on March 26 with a performance of Elgar's 'The Kingdom.' Though not a perfect rendering of the work, the choir deserves the utmost credit for the manner in which it overcame a difficult task. in which it overcame a difficult task. The orchestra, which only had one rehearsal, was for the most part far too overpowering, especially in the solos. The latter were ably rendered by Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. William Green and Mr. Dalton The orchestra, Baker. Mr. Lyell-Tayler led the orchestra, Mr. Wyatt lent useful aid at the organ, and Mr. Allen Gill gave of his best as conductor, though the effort of guiding an orchestra through such a work with only one rehearsal is more than should be demanded of him.

Miss Cantelo concluded her eleventh season of chambermusic concerts on April 3, when, in co-operation with the Brodsky Quartet, she gave a brilliant performance of Schumann's Quintet. A magnificent rendering of Beethoven's String Quartet in F (Op. 59, No. 1) was also included in the programme, and Miss Cantelo chose for her solo Brehme's Scherce in F flat minor (Op. 4). M. Brodeliu and Brahms's Scherzo in E flat minor (Op. 4). Mr. Brodsky and Mr. Speelman also played the Handel-Halvorsen Passacaglia for violin and viola. On April 9 the concert of the Evening School Choral Union, with its own orchestra, took place under the direction of Mr. Arthur Richards. That very useful work is being done by this organization was evident from the careful performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast,' exhibited both by choir and orchestra, as well as in the miscellaneous selection which followed.

On April 5, the choir of Wesley Chapel Broad Street gave a fine rendering of Spohr's 'Last Judgment,' under the baton of Mr. F. Marshall Ward.

The Gidling Choral Society concluded its season's work with a performance of Mendelssohn's 'Lauda Sion' and Gounod's 'By Babylon's Wave' in the parish church on April 12, under the conductorship of Mr. Herbert Richards.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT. (FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

An interesting experiment in choral amalgamation has just been made in South Yorkshire. Mr. Thomas Brameld being the conductor of the musical societies of Rotherham and Doncaster, it was decided to join forces and give a performance of 'The Apostles' in each town. By this means it was rendered possible to perform a work which, had each Society alone attempted an interpretation, would have been beyond the resources financial and executive of either place. Some economy was effected in the matter of principals and orchestra owing to the dual engagement, and the friendly rivalry—or shall I say emulation?—of the two towns produced beneficial results in the performances. choral rendering of Elgar's difficult work was of a very high standard. Only enthusiasm among rank and file and ability in the director could bring about such well-disciplined and The orchestra, though hardly sufficiently artistic singing. well balanced, played with commendable precision. Foreshew, Mr. Henry Brearley, Mr. Ivor Foster, Mr. Herbert Brown and Mr. Charles Knowles.

The Sheffield Musical Union, although busy with many foreign engagements, found time to prepare an attractive a capella programme for the Spring concert given in the Albert Hall on March 31. In the absence of an orchestra the audience was able to focus attention on the splendid choral technique of Dr. Coward's zealous singers. There was some beautiful, refined singing in Holbrooke's 'Footsteps of peautiful, renned singing in Holbrooke's 'Footsteps of angels,' but the choir was at its best in Smart's 'The Shepherd's lament' and Bantock's 'Awake, awake.' Bach's 'Sing ye to the Lord' was heroically sung, though Dr. Coward's tempi severely taxed the singers. Other works—in a programme which occupied nearly three and a-half hours—were MacEwen's 'Let me the canakin clink,' Callcott's 'O snatch me swift' and Elgar's 'The dance.' Miss Fanny Davies and Mr. John Dunn played the 'Kreutzer' Sonata and Madame De Vere-Sanio was the sale vecalist Sonata and Madame De Vere-Sapio was the solo vocalist.

At a concert given by the Sheffield Amateur Instrumental Society on March 30, Mr. J. Duffell conducted a well-studied performance of Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony, and Miss Alice Walker undertook the solo part in Beethoven's E flat Pianoforte concerto. Miss Walker's experience in concerto playing, now somewhat extensive, and her gifts of insight and good judgment, together with a well-developed technique, combined to produce a highly praiseworthy performance.

Another amateur instrumental organization, the Philbarmonic Orchestra, gave a successful concert on April 4, Mendelssohn's 'Scotch' Symphony being the chief work played. On April 2 the probationary branch of the orchestra in an excellent concert showed progress by a well prepared performance of Beethoven's first Symphony. Mr. J. H.

Parkes ably directed both concerts.

Among other events of a busy month have been the following: The Heeley Musical Union ('Acis and Galatea' and 'Blest pair of Sirens') conducted by Mr. M. Tomlinson; Penistone Choral Society (Mr. Joseph Cooper); Hillsbro' and District Choral Society (Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' and Cliffe's 'Ode to the North-East Wind'), directed by Mr. F. Shimeld; Norton Lees Choral Society (Cowen's 'St. John's Eve'), under the direction of Mr. Isaac White; the Sheffield Male Glee and Madrigal Society (Mr. W. H. Robinson, conductor); and the Sheffield Ladies' String Orchestra, directed by Mr. G. Ellenberger.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE. (FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

LEEDS.

Two important choral concerts have marked the close of the Leeds musical season: at one a great classic was heard, at the other some recent music of exceptional interest. Taking them in chronological order, the Philharmonic Society on March 25 gave Stanford's 'Stabat Mater,' which, when produced at the Leeds festival last October, made so favourable an impression that it was at once chosen for performance during the ordinary concerts of the season. With Miss Edith Evans, Miss Dilys Jones, Mr. Spencer Thomas and Mr. Plunket Greene as soloists, and conducted by the composer, it went exceedingly well, and the chorus, who evidently took a special interest in a task which the composer has made very congenial to them, sang with great refinement. There was a very interesting and promising novelty in the programme, in the shape of a cantata based on Rossetti's 'Blessed Damozel'—a poem which seems to be in exceptional favour with musicians just now, and small wonder, for its picturesque, mystical nature makes it peculiarly fitted for association with the most ideal of arts. Mr. E. B. Farrar, who is responsible for this setting, is a young composer who possesses a very real gift, and has already advanced far in the technique of his art. His youth is shown chiefly in two things: his anxiety to avoid the obvious, and the difficulty he finds in making the various sections hang together in an easy, natural succession. deserves especial praise for having treated so ethereal a subject with a light hand, and altogether the character of the poem is happily reflected in his thoughtful, interesting music. With Miss Dilys Jones in the one solo part the cantata went well, and the finished and expressive singing of the choir was altogether admirable. Dr. Charles Wood conducted his vividly true setting of 'A dirge for two veterans,' with Mr. Plunket Greene as soloist, and the remaining feature of a thoroughly interesting programme was the 'Tristan' Prelude and Liebestod, with Miss Edith Evans as the soloist.

No less a work than Bach's B minor Mass was chosen by the Leeds Choral Union for its concert on April 8. soloists, Miss Jenny Taggart, Miss Alice Lakin, H. Brearley and Mr. Herbert Brown, were all most efficient, and the choir sang with power, though Dr. Coward's reading of the work seemed to make for brilliant effect rather than to realize the majesty of the music. The orchestra was thoroughly efficient, which was the more satisfactory since it was almost entirely local, and consisted to a great extent of members of the Municipal Orchestra. On April 3 the Leeds Bohemian Quartet played, not for the first time, Debussy's String quartet, which certainly has the merit of seeming less artificial and forced in expression as one becomes used to its strange idiom.

A new quartet party made its first public appearance on April II; this time a ladies' quartet, organized by a Leeds violinist, Miss Alice Simpkin, whose colleagues were Miss D. Broughton—a daughter of the late Mr. Alfred Broughton, who was conductor of the Leeds Philharmonic Society—Miss Hilda Yeates and Miss E. Barron. They played a Haydn quartet, and, with Miss Ella Child as the very artistic pianist, Dvorák's Pianoforte quintet. With further practice together, these ladies should form a thoroughly efficient string quartet.

OTHER YORKSHIRE TOWNS.

The 'Dream of Gerontius,' was performed by the York Musical Society in the Exhibition Building on April 7, before an immense audience, who followed the music with close attention. The soloists were Miss Molly Deane, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Francis Harford, the chorus was refined if not very forceful or brilliant, and the orchestra, though partly amateur, was most efficient. Mr. T. Tertius Noble conducted exceedingly well, and the music went smoothly and without halting.

At Scarborough the Philharmonic Society, which under Dr. Ely is very active, gave the 'Dream of Gerontius' on March 24. This was the second performance of the oratorio by the Society, and a greater familiarity with the music enabled the choir to triumph over its difficulties. The dramatic realism displayed in the Demons' chorus and the delicacy of treatment shown in the Angelic choruses evidenced that the members of the choir had fully entered into the spirit of the work. The solo vocalists, Miss Dilys Jones, Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. William Higley were also excellent, and Dr. Ely, who conducted with marked ability, deserves every credit for the success of the performance.

The Keighley Musical Union essayed Brahms's German Requiem,' under Mr. J. B. Summerscales, on March 24. Mr. Herbert Brown's fine reading of the baritone solos was perhaps the most satisfactory feature of the performance. On March 27 the Hull Harmonic Society gave Sullivan's other parts Madame Amy Dewhurst, Mr. Joseph Reed and Mr. Fowler Burton were satisfactory. Mr. Walter Porter

On March 31 the Hull Vocal Society, under Dr. G. H. Smith, gave a miscellaneous programme. The Pudsey Choral Union showed artistic enterprise in attempting so difficult a work as Elgar's 'King Olaf,' on March 23, and acquitted itself creditably on the whole. Madame Effie Thomas, Mr. Archie Taylor and Mr. Marsden Williams were the principals, and Mr. H. H. Pickard conducted with energy and discretion.

The last of the Huddersfield Subscription Concerts, on March 31, consisted of a Tchaikovsky programme, given by the Halle Orchestra, for this occasion under Mr. Henry J. Wood's conductorship. The feature of the concert was the Violin concerto, finely interpreted by Dr. Brodsky, who, it will be remembered, was the first to introduce the work to public notice.

Foreign Motes.

AUSSIG.

An interesting discovery is said to have been made in this town, which lies on the border-land between Saxony and Bohemia, viz., a spinet which belonged to the Empress Marie Therese of Austria. Together with the instrument was found a letter, the contents of which showed that it was a royal gift to one of her ladies-in-waiting.

The programme included the master's Concerto in E flat, with the distinguished pianist, Arthur Schnabel, as interpreter. At the head of the programme stood the 'Leonore' overture, BRUSSELS.

Two very fine performances of Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion have been given here, and subsequently at Paris, by the famous Amsterdam choir and orchestra under the able direction of Heer Willem Mengelberg. The soloists were Mesdames Noordewier and de Haan, and Messrs. Urlus, T. Denys, and Messchaert, the rendering of the words of Jesus by the last named artist being profoundly impressive.

CHRISTIANIA.

Some friends in this city have presented to Miss Kathleen Parlow the Guarnerius violin which belonged to Viotti. The instrument was purchased from Hammig, of Berlin, for the sum of £2,000.

FRANKFORT.

Professor Iwan Knorr has been appointed director of the Hoch Conservatorium in place of Professor Bernard Scholz, who has resigned that post, although he will remain on the teaching staff. Knorr is well known both as a composer and a writer on music.

The inauguration of a monument to Bach is announced to take place on May 17. It has been placed close to St. Thomas's Church, where Bach was cantor and organist. On the previous evening two cantatas and the 'Magnificat' will be performed in the church, while on the following day the 'St. Matthew' Passion will be given at the Gewandhaus.

Moussorgsky's 'Boris Godounow' will be performed at On March 27 the Hull Harmonic Society gave Sullivan's the Opéra six times between May 15 and June 15. The Martyr of Antioch,' the facile tunefulness of which seemed to please, while the sympathetic singing of Miss Edith Evans in the part of the heroine was noteworthy, and in the Russian Opera. M. Felix Blumenfeld from the opera house just named will be the conductor. It is reported that arrangements have been made with Richard Strauss for a performance at the Opéra, not only of his 'Salome,' but also of his new opera 'Electra.'— 'Monna Vanna,' a lyrical drama in four acts after Maeterlinck's poem, will be produced at the Opéra here, early next year.

SARAGOSSA.

To celebrate the hundredth anniversary of the raising of the siege of this city, two festival concerts are to be given this month under the direction of the composer Ricardo Villa, from Madrid. The soloists will be Sarasate and Madame Berthe Marx Goldschmidt.

VIENNA.

The inauguration of the statue of Brahms on the Karlsplatz will take place on May 7, the seventy-fifth anniversary of the master's birth, when a part-song composed by the master will be sung for the first time. On the eve of the ceremony will be performed the German Requiem, while on the day after the inauguration the 'Magelone' song-cycle will be given.

WIESBADEN.

The usual festival performances will be given in May (10-20). The operas selected are Offenbach's 'Les Contes d'Hoffmann,' Weber's 'Oberon,' Gluck's 'Armide' and Wagner's 'Lohengrin.' The Kaiser, who intends to be present, has always taken special interest in the theatre.

Country Hews.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either prepared from local necuspapers or furnished by correspondents.

BATLEY.—The hundredth concert given by the Batley Choral Society took place on March 17. The commemoration took the form of a Handel concert, 'Acis and Galatea' and selections from 'Jephtha,' 'Judas Maccabæus,' 'Samson' and 'The Messiah' being performed. The solo vocalists were Madame Conly, Mr. Fred Fallas and Mr. Joseph Lycett. The choir was well balanced and sang with spirit, and Mr. John Fearnley conducted.

BLACKBURN.—The Blackburn Ladies' Choir, conducted by Mr. F. Duckworth, gave a concert in the Town Hall on April 2 in aid of local charities. A prominent feature of the programme was Mr. Wolstenholme's choral ballad 'Sir Humphrey Gilbert,' which was given for the first time on this occasion. Mr. Wolstenholme has written a very graphic musical setting for ladies' voices of Longfellow's weird poem. The choir entered into the spirit of the work with enthusiasm, and also gave an effective rendering of several part-songs. Mr. Wolstenholme, who, needless to say, received a hearty welcome in his native town, played two Preludes, and a Ballade of Chopin and some of his own compositions. Miss Alice Whittaker and Mr. Ernest Edmondson were the solo vocalists.—The closing concert of the S. Cecilia and Vocal Union's season took place in the Exchange Hall on April 9. The programme consisted entirely of excerpts from Wagner's operas. The orchestra—selected as usual from Hallé's band—gave spirited renderings of the overtures to 'Die Meistersinger' and 'Tannhäuser' and of the 'Ride of the Valkyries,' and the choir of 150 voices was heard to great advantage in 'The Flying Dutchman,' Act III., the Finale ('Die Meistersinger') and the chorus 'Hail, bright abode' (Tannhäuser). The principal vocalists, Miss Agnes Nicholls and Messrs. Joseph O'Mara, William Higley, Robert Habbeshaw and W. Hayle, contributed to the success of the concert, which was conducted by Dr. E. C. Bairstow.

BROMLEY.—The Musical Society gave its fourth concert this season at the Drill Hall on April 7. The programme was of special interest, inasmuch as it contained compositions by British composers only, and included besides Stanford's 'The Revenge' as its main feature, Sterndale Bennett's greatly appreciate overture 'Paradise and the Peri,' Coleridge-Taylor's Orchestral Ballad in A minor; while the part-music trained the choir.

sung by the choir consisted of Lee Williams's choral ode 'Music,' Beale's 'Come, let us join the roundelay,' and Faning's 'The vagabonds.' The soloists were Miss Pitt Soper (vocalist), Mr. Aubrey Ford (violinist) and Mr. Albert Fransella (flautist). The concert was ably conducted by Mr. F. Lewis Thomas.

Callander.—The annual secular concert of the United Free Church Choir took place on April 10 in the Public Hall. The choir gave an excellent rendering of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast,' Mr. W. S. Hamilton singing the tenor solo. The choir also sang with precision and expression Faning's 'Daybreak' and 'Song of the Vikings,' Pearson's 'Ironfounders' and Garrett's 'Good-night, farewell.' In the last-mentioned, Miss Macniven and Mrs. Coletts undertook the solo portions. A professional quintet of strings, led by Mr. J. M. Cooper, assisted with the accompaniments. Miss Armit and Mr. W. S. Hamilton contributed songs, and Mr. James Messeas, violoncello solos. Mr. J. A. W. Gill conducted.

CHELTENHAM.—An oratorio recital was given by the Festival Society, conducted by M. J. A. Matthews, in the Bennington Lecture Hall on March 31, when a new cantata, entitled 'The life everlasting,' by Mr. Henry A. Matthews, was performed for the first time in England, together with Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer' and a selection from 'Elijah.' The cantata, which is written for contralto, tenor and baritone soli and chorus, is melodious, and possesses attractive qualities. It was well sung by choir and principals—Miss Ada Bennett, Mr. A. J. Ranson and Mr. Percy Heming; other solo vocalists who appeared being Miss Susanne Palmer and Miss May Edwards. The accompaniments were played by Messrs W. E. Haslum and H. J. Wycherley (pianoforte), and Mr. A. G. Bloodworth (organ).

COCKERMOUTH.—An interesting performance of the 'Antigone' of Sophocles, with Mendelssohn's music, took place in the Public Hall on March 23. The play was excellently acted in costume on a special stage after the Greek method, and the music was effectively rendered by the chorus on the stage (assisted by an unseen chorus) under the conductorship of Mr. Turver.

COLWYN BAY.—Mendelssohn's 'Athalie' was performed on March 24 at the annual concert of the English Presbyterian Church Choir, which was assisted by a string orchestra, with Mr. H. J. Edwards at the organ. The choruses were sung with vigour and precision under the conductorship of Mr. S. Glynne Jones, and the solo vocalists were Mrs. Broadbent, Mrs. L. M. Burrell and Mrs. Glynne Jones. Miss Elsie Coulter recited the narrative, and the parts of Joad and Salomith were recited by Mr. J. Ellis Williams and Miss Williams.—The first concert of the newly-formed Philharmonic Society took place in the Pier Pavilion on March 24, when Van Bree's 'St. Cecilia's Day' occupied the first part of the programme, Miss Annie Nelson taking the solo parts. Mr. Gurney Barnett was the conductor. The second part of the concert was miscellaneous and included Prout's prize Quartet for pianoforte and strings and the following part-songs: 'In this hour of softened splendour' (Pinsuti), 'Song of the Pedlar' (Lee Williams), and Eaton Faning's 'Song of the Vikings.' The ladies' choir sang 'The Spanish Gipsy Girl' (Lassen).

COUPAR ANGUS.—The Choral Society gave its second concert this season at the Victoria Hall on April 1. Cowen's 'John Gilpin' and Faning's 'Song of the Vikings,' which were the most prominent features, received an adequate rendering and gave indication of the careful training received from the conductor, Mr. W. H. Young. The accompaniments were performed by a string quartet (led by Mr. H. Hollingworth), who also played Schubert's Ballet music, 'Rosamunde.' The solo vocalists were Miss Louisa Moir and Mr. David Hill.

DOWLAIS.—A performance of Haydn's 'Creation' was given at the Oddfellows' Hall on April 9 by the Bryn Sion Choral Society and an excellent band, led by Mr. A. Angle. The solo vocalists were Miss Alicia Maude Cove, Mr. Richard Thomas and Mr. G. T. Llewelyn. The choral singing was greatly appreciated, and great praise is due to the conductor, Mr. W. Hughes, for the excellent way in which he had trained the choir.

EALING.—Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' was the prominent feature of the concert given by the Choral Society on April 7. Both in tone and attack the choir merited much commendation, and the orchestra also did excellent work, the performance throughout reflecting credit on the conductor, Mr. Cliffe Forrester. The solo parts were sung by Miss Betty Booker, Miss Mary Peters, Mr. James Davis and Mr. Reginald Gooud. During the evening Sullivan's 'Brother, thou art gone before us' was sung by the choir in memory of the late Mr. J. N. Frye, for many years honorary secretary of the Society.

FAVERSHAM.—The Faversham Institute Philharmonic Society gave its sixteenth concert in the Lecture Hall on April 2, when Haydn's 'Creation' received an excellent performance, the choir singing with spirit and confidence. The orchestra was led by Mr. C. S. Greenhead, and the solo parts were sung by Miss Ethel Radburn, Mr. Frank Webster and Mr. S. Heath. Mr. W. J. Keech conducted.

GOSPORT.—The Gosport and Alverstoke Choral Society gave a performance of 'Hiawatha' at the Thorngate Hall on April 7. The solo vocalists were Madame Anna Shergold, Mr. Elliston Webb and Mr. Reginald Stewart. The choir sang with accuracy and precision, the unaccompanied parts being excellently rendered. The orchestra played the accompaniments with admirable restraint. Mr. Ernest Douglass conducted.

Great Ayton.—A very creditable rendering of Anderton's 'The Norman Baron' was given by the Choral Society on March 27. The choir sang well throughout, attack and intonation both being good, while the divided chorus for male voices (unaccompanied) proved very effective. The orchestra, though small, was carefully selected from the well-known players of the district, and was noticeable for the good quality of tone and the tasteful rendering of the work. The village hall was crowded, and the audience proved by its enthusiasm to be appreciative of the works put before it. Considering this is the first season of the Society's operations, congratulations are due upon the result of the second concert, the success of which was greatly owing to the untiring work of the conductor, Mr. B. Mills Francis.

GUERNSEY.—The Guille-Allès Choral and Orchestral Associations gave their annual concerts on March 31 and April 1. On the first occasion Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' was performed. This work had not been sung in Guernsey for many years, so that its revival was attended with much interest. The solos were successfully undertaken by Miss Mabel Manson, Miss Joan Ashley, Mr. Harold Wilde and Mr. Dan Price. On the second evening Elgar's oratorio 'The Dream of Gerontius' received its first rendering in the Channel Islands. Great efforts had been made by all concerned to secure an adequate performance, and a satisfactory interpretation was the result. The soloists were the same as in 'St. Paul.' Mr. John David conducted and Mrs. John Gardner was the accompanist.

HOYLAKE.—On March 30 the Hoylake and West Kirby Male-Voice Choir presented its popular conductor, Mr. Charles Hughes, with a substantial cheque, contributed to by members of the choir and the subscribers to the concerts.

Huntingdon. — The Huntingdon and Godmanchester Choral Society made its first public appearance in the Corn Exchange on March 26, choosing for its début a no less ambitious work than Elgar's 'King Olaf.' The choir consisted of 120 voices, and at once gave indications of the careful training bestowed by Mr. Frank Clark, the conductor, singing throughout with spirit and precision. The orchestra was also efficient, and included several members of the London Symphony Orchestra. The solo vocalists were Miss Gladys Honey, Mr. Gwilym Richards and Mr. Harold A. Reaney.

HYTHE.—The Choral Society gave the third concert of the fifth season on March 25, when Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' was performed. The principal vocalists were Miss Myfanwy Young, Miss Marion Battishill, Mr. J. Pearson and Mr. Percival Driver. Herr Anton Peers led the band, and Dr. A. T. Froggatt conducted.

MAIDSTONE.—Handel's 'Judas Maccabeus' was performed on March 30 in the Corn Exchange by the Choral Union, numbering 180 voices, under the conductorship of essential to the solemn character of the work. The choir

Mr. F. Wilson Parish, to whom every credit is due for the excellent choral singing. There was a complete orchestra (led by Mr. Easter Smith), and the solo vocalists were Miss Pitt-Soper, Miss Dora May, Mr. Merlin Davies and Mr. Aubrey Millward.

MARKET DRAYTON.—The Musical Society, which has recently been revived after a lapse of years, gave a concert in the Town Hall on April 7 with very promising results. The programme consisted chiefly of Stanford's 'The Revenge' and Elgar's 'Banner of St. George.' The new choir was well balanced, and sang with intelligence and enthusiasm under the spirited conductorship of Mr. Fred. Evans. The soloist in Elgar's cantata was Miss Mollie Renton, other soloists in the miscellaneous part being Mrs. George Swinton (vocalist) and Miss Horwood (violinist). The North Staffordshire Orchestra provided the accompaniments, and also played the overtures to 'Preciosa' and 'The Merry Wives of Windsor.'

Nelson.—The annual choir festival of Carr Road Wesleyan Chapel took place on April 4 and 5. On the Saturday evening a special attraction was provided in Mackenzie's 'Dream of Jubal' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise.' These were very creditably rendered by the choir of over 100 voices, under the direction of Mr. H. Armstrong Smith. The solo vocalists were Miss Emily Breare and Mr. Henry Turnpenney, while Mr. Charles Fry once more resumed his functions as narrator of Mr. Joseph Bennett's beautiful poem. The orchestral accompaniments were skilfully played on the organ by Dr. Arthur Pollitt, of Liverpool. On the Sunday afternoon and evening special musical services were held, when the same artists took part, Mr. Charles Fry reciting in the afternoon and again, by special request, in the evening 'King Robert of Sicily,' with Mr. John E. West's excellent musical accompaniment, played by Dr. Pollitt.

NEWPORT (DUNDER).—The Newport Choral Society gave a performance of Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' on April 8. The chorus-singing was marked by intelligence and good expresssion, and the solo part was sung by Miss Alice Philip. In the miscellaneous selection which followed the choir was heard in Eaton Faning's 'Moonlight' and a chorus from Flotow's opera 'Martha,' and the orchestra, in addition to providing an adequate accompaniment to the cantata, played Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' overture. Mr. W. J. Calderwood conducted.

NORTHWOOD.—The Choral Society gave a concert in the Assembly Hall on April 7, when the programme included Handel's 'Acis and Galatea,' Faning's 'Song of the Vikings,' Edward German's 'O peaceful night' and 'The soldiers' chorus' from 'Faust,' interspersed with vocal solos by Miss Nora Osborne Williams, Mr. Walter Heal, Mr. Bernard Turner and Mr. Arthur Walenn. Mr. W. H. Hilton conducted.

PETERBOROUGH.—The second subscription concert of the Choral Union took place in the Drill Hall on March 24, when Handel's oratorio 'Samson' was performed under the conductorship of Dr. Haydn Keeton. The solo vocalists were Madame Jaques, Mrs. C. Stevens, Mr. Joseph Reed and Mr. J. B. Smith. The choir was well balanced and sang with spirit, and the orchestra gave able assistance.

PETERHEAD.—The Choral Society's last concert this season took place in the Music Hall on March 25, when 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast' constituted the first part of the programme. The choir sang well throughout, and the orchestra, led by Mr. James M. Riach, was specially successful, the whole performance reflecting credit on Mr. Warren T. Clemens, the conductor. The solo was sung by Mr. W. S. Hamilton, other soloists appearing in the miscellaneous selection which followed being Miss Susan Yule and Mr. Walter Harvey. The concert concluded with the March and Chorus from 'Tannhäuser.'

PORTSMOUTH.—The Borough of Portsmouth Philharmonic Society is to be congratulated on its enterprise in giving the first performance in this locality of Elgar's 'The Dream of Gerontius,' which took place in the Town Hall on March 26. The interpretation of the work was in all respects highly creditable, the conductor, Mr. Hugh Burry, having evidently imbued his forces with the reverential spirit essential to the solemn character of the work. The choir was augmented by the boy choristers of Portsea Parish Church, and the orchestra was led by Mr. Blagrove. The solo parts were ably rendered by Miss Maria Yelland, Mr. Frederick Ranalow and Mr. Gervase Elwes.

Mr. Frederick Ranalow and Mr. Gervase Elwes.

RIPON.—The Ripon Choral Society gave a performance of sacred music in the cathedral on March 31, when the following works were sung: Psalm 150 (César Franck), 'The abode of worship' (H. C. Perrin), and 'A stronghold sure' (Bach). The soloists were Madame Annie Norledge, Mrs. H. M. Bower, Mr. A. A. Lee and Mr. J. W. Senior. Dr. H. C. Perrin, organist of Canterbury Cathedral, presided at the organ, Mr. C. Gray was at the pianoforte, and the drums were played by Mr. J. Shaw. Mr. C. H. Moody conducted.

SOUTHPORT.—Granville Bantock's 'Christ in the wilderness' (produced at the Gloucester Festival last year), Cowen's 'He giveth His beloved sleep' and Max Bruch's 'On Jordan's banks' were successfully performed by the Choral Society under the conductorship of Mr. J. C. Clark on April 7. The singing of the choir displayed intelligent expression and attack throughout, and the accompaniments were ably interpreted by the orchestra, which included many of the Hallé band, who also gave a fine rendering of Sibelius's 'Spring Song,' Berlioz's 'Marche hongroise' (Faust) and other pieces. Special mention should be made of Miss Emily Breare's beautiful singing. The other vocalists were Miss Ethel Wynne Jones and Mr. Arthur Rostron.

SWINDON.—Gounod's 'Redemption' was performed by the Choral and Orchestral Union connected with the Mechanics' Institute, on April 1. The choir and orchestra, numbering 160, and a choir of forty boys, together with the principal vocalists, Miss Ethel Lister, Mr. James Davis, Mr. David Evans and Mr. Harry Dearth, combined in giving a very successful interpretation of the work. Mr. H. T. Sims conducted.

TAMWORTH.—The Choral Society concluded its season on March 26 with Mendelssohn's oratorio 'St. Paul.' The band and chorus numbered 130, the solo vocalists being Miss May Eaves, Mrs. Gledhill (a member of the Society), Mr. Wilfrid Hudson and the Rev. R. Spurrell. Mr. H. Rose conducted, and the performance was warmly appreciated.

TAUNTON.—On March 24 the Taunton Choral Society gave a concert, at which Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus' was performed under the direction of Mr. Reginald Ward. The choir showed that it had been most carefully trained; especially was this noticeable in such fugal passages as 'We worship God.' The accompaniments were excellently played by Mr. Max Heymann's Bath orchestra, and the soloists were Miss Ethel Lister, Mrs. A. Maggs, Mr. Harold Wilde and Mr. Harry Dearth.

TOWYN.—The Towyn (Bethesda) United Choral Society gave a concert in the Assembly Rooms on March 27, the prominent feature of the programme being Mr. Alfred R. Gaul's cantata 'The Holy City.' The solo vocalists were Miss Myfanwy Jones, Miss Josephine Williams, Mr. Evan Lewis and Mr. Tudor Owen. Mr. H. W. Griffith conducted.

Wellington (Salop).—The Choral Union gave its last concert on April 10. The programme consisted of Elgar's 'King Olaf' and a miscellaneous selection, including the Overture to 'William Tell' and the March and Chorus from 'Tannhäuser.' The choruses in 'King Olaf' were exceedingly well sung and the solo vocalists, Miss Ethel Lister, Mr. Samuel Masters and Mr. Forder Burton deserve praise for their share of the work. The band, mainly drawn from the Birmingham Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of Mr. T. E. Clarke, acquitted themselves admirably. Mr. Malcolm Allison conducted.

WORCESTER.—An excellent performance of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was given by the Musical Society in the Public Hall on March 24. The choir sang with marked intelligence and power, and received efficient support from the orchestra, led by Mr. W. H. Dyson. The principal vocalists were Miss Laura Tayler, an excellent soprano, Miss Olive James, Mr. H. E. Large and Mr. Graham Smart, who gave a highly effective and dramatic interpretation of the title part. Mr. W. Mann Dyson, who conducted, is to be congratulated on the success of the performance.

Answers to Correspondents.

- F. G. W.—'The arrangement of a full score' varies, but you will find Prout's primer on Instrumentation a safe guide on the subject. You are quite right in your 'fancy that some publishers pay lump sums down for compositions'; in such cases they would naturally 'publish on their own account.' There would be no harm in submitting the creations of your fancy to publishers, but whether they would be willing to entertain them is another matter.
- A. V. L.—You will find that the Novello edition of Schubert's Mass in E flat, as revised by Mr. T. F. A. Gale, does not omit the words 'Et unam Sanctam Catholicam, et Apostolicam Ecclesiam' (see p. 84 of the octavo score). In his prefatory note Mr. Gale says: 'While correcting the omissions which have been made in the text, I have altered the music as little as possible; but in no instance has the composer's harmony been interfered with.'

- L. Y.—The only course we can suggest in order to obtain 'a summer engagement at some English watering-place' is to apply to a reliable agent. Such an engagement, when obtained, would by no means be in/ra dig. if the surroundings are artistic, as they certainly are at many seaside resorts. You might sing under an assumed name pro tem.
- A. P.—The name of 'J. B. Pereira' does not appear in Miss Stainer's primer, 'A dictionary of violin makers.' In order to ascertain the value of your violin bearing the above name, you had better submit it to Messrs. W. E. Hill & Sons, who, in return for a fee, will give you reliable information.

DENYS.—We have not heard of the arrival in London of M. Victor Maurel. Watch the concert advertisements of the London daily newspapers to see if his appearance is announced. A letter might reach him if addressed to the care of the agent managing the concert.

T. G.—The poems you submit for our opinion are rather gloomy. Why not let your second attempt be upon a subject that is bright and cheerful in character, one in which the refrain shall refrain from dwelling upon 'I'm weary of the strife,' and so on?

CHI SUB.—The information as to names, &c., given in Sullivan's collected Hymn Tunes is correct and we are unable to throw any light on the discrepancies caused in this respect by his biographers.

RESEARCH.—For biographical dictionaries of musicians in the countries you name, consult Fétis for France; Mendel, also Riemann, for Germany; and Baker for the United States. We know of no others beyond the two you name.

ORPHEUS.—The books on the 'Italian method of training the voice' would form a considerable library in themselves. An ounce of good teaching is worth a hundredweight of such tone-tomes.

W. F. S.—'Cathedral Organists,' by John E. West, is the book you require. Some of the stipends paid to cathedral organists are given in the Clergy List.

LAMBOURN. — Brown & Stratton's 'British Musical Biography' is now published by the Vincent Music Company.

G. E. P.—We are afraid that your copy of Handel's 'Messiah' is of no intrinsic value.

CANTOR.—The season of grand opera at Paris continues practically all the year round.

A. W.—See the answer to G. E. P.

CANTATA

FOR FEMALE VOICES

VERSE BY JAMES STRANG

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"The musical settings are twelve in number, the part-writing for first and second sopranos and contraltos. The utmost care and finish has been bestowed in wedding appropriate music to the verse, and Mr. Gaul has written nothing finer, nor more melodious and captivating in this branch of composition specially adapted for High Schools for Girls. The cantata begins with an instrumental introduction in the form of a barcarolle, in G minor, 9-8 time, moderato. At the close the tempo changes to 2-4, Allegro agitato, descriptive of an approaching storm. But this is of short duration and leads to the chorus, 'Toiling and tossed on the restless sea,' which is dramatic and spirited in character, the theme being based upon a bright melody, and the part-writing remarkably effective. No. 2 is a Cradle Song, 'Come, my baby,' in G major, Andante moderato, 3-4 time, allotted to a contralto. The accompaniment to this delightful fullaby is constructed on a pedal note, the melody that accompanies it being at once expressive and thoroughly characteristic. The chorus which immediately follows the cradle song opens with a tempestuous instrumental introduction of chromatic scale passages and chords, the key now changing into C major, 12-8 time, Allegro con fuoco. At the fourteenth bar the chorus enters with 'Oh, ho! for the winds that blow'; the whole of this number being of an impassionate and restless character. Quite in contrast to the foregoing is the pretty ballad for soprano, 'A mermaid dwelt,' which closely follows the chorus. It is in Tempo di Barcarolle in F major, 6-8 time, quaint and most expressivo. A short unaccompanied trio, 'The twilight gray is falling,' brings us to what may be termed the gem of the work, a song for soprano, 'O, manly hearts.' The key is E flat major, 2-4 time, Andantino expressivo. Mr. Gaul is here in his happiest mood, the whole song being graceful and charming to a degree. The number that follows is the chorus 'Darker and darker grows the night,' which is preceded by a characteristic instrumental

THE ELFIN HILL AN OPERETTA FOR SCHOOL USE

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"The Elfin Hill' is founded on one of Hans Andersen's charming stories, and the libretto has been written in dainty and graceful language by Miss Baldwick. The operetta opens with a short overture describing moonlight on the Dovrefeld Mountains, and Mr. Gaul has been particularly happy in infusing the Norse spirit into that portion of his music which deals with goblin life in Norway. When the goblins become visitors in fairyland, the character of the music changes; lightness is its predominant feature, perhaps the choicest fragment being a fairy dance. This latter, together with a very characteristic dance of elves and a shadow dance, were beautifully executed."—Birmingham Gazette.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

EDITED, ARRANGED IN GROUPS, AND THE FINGERING REVISED AND SUPPLEMENTED

FRANKLIN

THIS Collection of Studies is intended to illustrate the various elements of a complete course of pianoforte technique, and to provide students with the means of attacking and overcoming the different special difficulties which have to be encountered. With this view, the Studies have been arranged in groups, those in each group being placed in progressive order, and having reference to some one particular difficulty. The greater part of the studies themselves have been selected from the standard works of the most eminent Study-writers, and with these are included numerous others, which, though of equally great practical utility, have hitherto been less generally accessible.

SELECTED PIANOFORTE STUDIES

PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THE present collection of studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most ficial.

The Studies are grouped in two Sets, and are so arranged that the different Books in which they are contained may be taken in consecutive order; but pupils who are already further advanced than the elementary stage represented by Set I. may commence at once with Set II., which will be found to be complete in itself, and to illustrate all the essential elements of technique.

Where additional studies are desired, or studies on certain subjects which are not touched upon in this series, the larger collection, published under the title of "Progressive Studies" (from which the present examples have been selected), is of course available.

IN TWO SETS (EIGHT BOOKS), PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH BOOK.

A Modern School for the Violin

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" will consist of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (8A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.-STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (8B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on.

EXPRESSION

PIANOFORTE PLAYING FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful-to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et cætera.

SEVENTH AND REVISED EDITION.

A HANDBOOK EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

600 QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS

ERNEST A. DICKS, Fellow of the Royal College of Organists.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found extremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fague, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, London, Dublin, Durham, and Edinburgh, and the Victoria University; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Music, and The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cower is too obvious to need further comment or commendation.

PREFACE TO THE SEVENTH EDITION.

PREFACE TO THE SEVENTH EDITION.

Through the kindness of Dr. E. H. Turpin the seventh edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music includes the latest type of Papers set by Trinity College of Music, London, in their scheme of Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge.

The work will also be found to have been considerably enlarged by the addition of fifty specimen questions, with answers. They have been designed for the most part after the manner of those set in the Theory Paper for the L.R.A.M. Diploms, and also that required by candidates for the Higher Practical Examinations held by Trinity College of Music, London. The author earnestly hopes that these additions will considerably enhance the value of the Handbook, and render it increasingly helpful to students.

These Pianoforte Studies have been highly praised by M. VLADIMIR DE PACHMANN, who has expressed his intention of playing some of them during his Recital Tour in the United States. His testimonial is published with the Work, which consists of Twelve Numbers, specially designed to develop power and skill in the fourth and fifth fingers. The importance of trying to equalize these weaker fingers with the stronger ones is unquestionable, as defective execution is more often traceable to this inequality of the fingers than to any other cause. other cause.

ANTONIN DVOŘÁK

QUEEN'S HALL (February 26, 1908).—"The programme opened with Dvorák's fourth symphony in G major. This is a work which ought to be in the repertory of every orchestra, for it contains some of the most beautiful music that Dvorák ever wrote; every movement is full of lovely melody, and the themes of the scherzo and the slow movement are, even for Dvorák, extraordinarily fresh and fragrant."—The Times, February 27, 1908.

THE CHOIRBOY'S GUIDE

THE CATHEDRAL PSALTER

EDITED AND ARRANGED BY

ERNEST NEWTON.

This little book has been compiled mainly for the use of choirboys, and, therefore, nothing has been inserted but what is absolutely necessary for understanding the pointing of the Psalms as arranged in the Cathedral Psalter.

A certain amount of information has been given for the guidance of the Choirmaster, but the principal part of the book consists in the sets of exercises which have been arranged to lead the choirboys, step by step, through the various divisions of syllables that occur in the chanting of the Psalms.

After careful examination of the Cathedral Psalter, it has been found that there are exactly fifteen ways of dividing these been found that there are exactly fifteen ways of dividing these

As the Recitation Notes are well within the compass of Alto, Tenor, and Bass voices, the book can be used with equal advantage by all members of a choir.

Price Ninepence.

POINTS FOR PIANISTS.

The modern pianist is a slave to keyboard practice. Full and complete emancipation from his slavery is, however, afforded by the well-known "Brain to Keyboard" System. As a consequence of Mr. Macdonald Smith's discovery, which is a physiological one, there is no point, even of the most advanced technique, that is not more easily and more thoroughly acquired by this system away from the keyboard than by direct practice, and no pianist is fully equipped without its aid. Those interested may have proof of these statements in the little illustrated book which Mr. Macdonald Smith is ready to send free to any pianist, and in which the principles of his remarkable method are explained.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS (TENOR)

"JUDAS MACCABÆUS" AT THE CITY TEMPLE.

The critic of Musical Opinion writes: "Mr. Samuel Masters was the tenor. At the time of his first coming out I had occasion to express my opinion pretty strongly as to his great merits as a concert singer, and now he has blossomed into a Handelian tenor of marked value. I was pleased beyond measure by his delivery of the two great and difficult airs which Handel assigned to the Jewish hero."—Musical Opinion, April, 1907.

ROBIN OVERLEIGH

RECITAL, BECHSTEIN HALL,

MAY 13, 1908.

THE TIMES.

May 14, 1908.

Mr. Robin Overleigh, who gave a vocal recital yesterday in Bechstein Hall, has a baritone voice of charming quality, and he has evidently been well trained. . . . His old French songs were phrased and delivered with distinct musical ability; Caccini's "Amarilli" was a good example of sustained singing, and Carissimi's "Vittoria" was brilliantly sung . . . Walford Davies's "This ae nighte" was made duly impressive, however, and "I love the jocund dance" was so skilfully sung that it had to be repeated. A couple of songs by A. H. Brewer, Blow's "Self-Banished." dance" was so skilfully sung that it had to be repeated. A couple of songs by A. H. Brewer, Blow's "Self-Banished," and well-known songs by Bennett, Arthur Somervell, and Parry were also given, and the singer made a distinct success.

THE STANDARD.

Praise is due to Mr. Robin Overleigh for presenting such an unconventional programme at his recital in Bechstein Hall yesterday afternoon, and also for his ability in sustaining the interest of a large audience to the very end. He uses his well-trained baritone voice effectively and with a good method of production. The tone is even throughout its range, and of a musical quality. . . . His singing of Caccini's "Amarilli" and Carissimi's "Vittoria" was expressive, and his phrasing artistic. His rendering of Brahms's songs was in last effort as they were given with the dismifest item. his best effort, as they were given with the dignified interpretation they need, and moreover it proved that he will be invaluable in oratorio. He was successful in two new songs by Dr. Herbert Brewer, sung with considerable charm of voice and style.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

May 14, 1008.

Mr. Overleigh, who has a good baritone voice, gave some interesting old examples by Lully, Martini, and others, and towards the end he was heard in some English songs, mostly modern. His efforts went to show that he has in him the makings of a good, capable singer.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

May 14, 1908.

In the afternoon Mr. Robin Overleigh gave a concert at e same hall with much success. His baritone voice is the same hall with much success. essentially pleasing in quality, and although towards the end it sounded fatigued, its production did not appear to be at fault. He sings, too, with much sincerity, and made the fullest effect with Walford Davies's charming "Fear no more the heat o' the sun." His programme was wide in its range; it included Brahms's "Vier ernste Gesänge" and some early Italian arias, besides other English examples.

RÉPERTOIRE INCLUDES ALL STANDARD AND MODERN Works.

"The greatest success of the evening was scored by Mr. William Coleman, in the part of Elijah. His voice is of splendid quality and good range. He was well up in the Prophet music, and his dramatic singing rose to great heights. His rendering of 'Is not His word evoked rounds of applause, while the tenderness and feeling with which he infused the air 'It is enough' was truly beautiful."—The Wallasey News, May 2, 1908.

DR. WALFORD DAVIES.

Those who carefully watch the creative output of British composers cannot fail to be struck with its vastness. At no time of our history was there more activity in putting pen to paper than there is at present, especially on the part of the younger men. In all departments of music, especially orchestral, does this remarkable productivity find expression. No one can find fault with the quantity per se of this mass of compositions, but what of the This question may be followed by quality? another: Is all this newly-created music sincere? Each one must answer this for himself; but there are many thoughtful people who cannot help feeling that some, at least, of these new strains are so eccentric, so formless, and so lacking in vitality as to justify the question. Clever much of it undoubtedly is, but mere cleverness will not atone for incoherency and lack of inspiration. It would be unfair to charge all our young composers with the shortcomings above referred to: one, at least, cannot be so accused, the earnest-minded musician who forms the subject of this biographical sketch.

Henry Walford Davies was born at Oswestry, September 6, 1869. From his infancy he breathed an atmosphere of music. His father, Mr. John Whitridge Davies, was an enthusiastic amateur, a man who loved music for its own sake and whose influence among his fellows made for the promotion of an art very dear to him. A good flute-player and violoncellist, Mr. Davies was also choirmaster of the Congregational Church, Oswestry, of which his brother and two of his sons (brothers of the subject of this sketch) were organists in succession. But Mr. Whitridge Davies exercised a wider influence over the town in founding and conducting choral societies. Here his enthusiasm found full scope, and he took endless pains in training his vocal and instrumental forces to attain a high standard of excellence. His good deeds were recorded more than fifty years ago in a London journal devoted to music, THE MUSICAL TIMES, for the first time in November, 1855. Two years later, in the columns of this journal, we read:

OSWESTRY.—The fourth concert of the Oswestry Choral. Society was held on Friday, the 2nd ult, in the Powis Hall. Miss Williams and Mr. Pierce, of the Liverpool Philharmonic, were engaged as solo singers. The choruses and instrumental accompaniments were managed by amateurs, led by Mr. Eyeley, and under the conductorship of Mr. J. Whitridge Davies, who has been indefatigable since the commencement of the society, of which he was the originator, in training the members. The meeting passed off well, and the selections from Handel and Haydn were performed in a manner that would have done credit to musical societies of far greater pretensions. (The MUSICAL TIMES, November, 1857, p. 144).

Later on Mr. Whitridge Davies, who was a great admirer of Handel and Mendelssohn, founded a Handel Society at Oswestry. On April 1, 1872, when Walford was a babe aged two, 'Judas Maccabæus' was performed, as a notice in THE MUSICAL TIMES of May, 1872, duly records. In 1875 a performance of 'Samson' was 'a genuine success,' and 'the choruses were exceedingly well sung,' so the columns of this journal record. Too much importance cannot be attached to the great value of such amateur work as Walford Davies's father undertook in promoting the love of music among his fellow townsfolk. All honour to his memory for pioneer work so accomplished.

To return to Master Walford. He was eleven years old when he played his first service at Oswestry Congregational Church. The great change in his life, however, occurred two years later when, on January 20, 1882, he became a chorister of St. George's Chapel, Windsor. Sir George Elvey was then organist, and honoured the boy by one day taking him for a drive, when he made him harmonize the chromatic scale. Davies soon became a solo boy, as on Easter Sunday he was selected to sing 'I know that my Redeemer liveth.' In recalling those early days at Windsor, Dr. Davies says, 'Elvey's thunder was worth hearing.' When he played the chord of D, he always added to his handfuls of notes C sharp below the bass, sometimes as an acciaccatura, and sometimes holding down the leading-note!

Elvey's long reign came to an end in a few months when, in June, 1882, Mr. (now Sir) Walter Parratt was appointed organist. The change was very great. Among other things the F compass of the organ was changed to C, and the keyboards were removed from the east to the south side of the organ case. The new organist instituted a daily practice of the choristers from 8.30 to 9 a.m., which has been continued to this day. Dr. Davies remembers the packages of unheard-of music which Sir Walter Parratt often brought to those practices. He speaks in the most appreciative terms of the invaluable lessons he learnt at Windsor and of the inspiration he received from Sir Walter reading Palestrina motets from open score, gaining precious hints in organ accompaniments, and 'picking up' so much from such a masterall of which have been of the greatest service to him in his subsequent career as an organist. It of organist at the Chapel Royal, Windsor Park. was during the early days of his choristership that Walford Davies appeared as a soloist at a concert at Windsor, which was thus recorded in THE Musical Times of February, 1884:

with my father discussing plans as to my future work. On the very day that I should have left Windsor (March 3) my father died very suddenly.' Walford then became an assistant to Sir Walter Parratt, a post he held for five years, 1885 to 1890. To the duties of assistant were added those Having won an open scholarship for composition at the Royal College of Music in January, 1890, the subject of this sketch left Windsor for London. His principal professors at the College were WINDSOR.—The Annual Carol Concert took place, at the Albert Institute, on Monday evening, the 7th ult., under the term), and Mr. W. S. Rockstro. Ramsbottom, Ogilwy, and O. Christian. Mr. H. R. Couldrey presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. A. Smith at the harmonium.

The breaking of his voice was attended by a pathetic incident. 'In the ordinary course of strength he needed. In March, 1898, on the events,' says Dr. Davies, 'I should have completed resignation of the late Dr. E. J. Hopkins, he was my choristership at Windsor on March 3, 1885. appointed organist and choirmaster of the Temple Oswestry on the Friday, and had three happy days genius of his distinguished predecessor.

he only retained the post for one year, and became organist of Christ Church, Hampstead. duties of the latter appointment left him more time for study than if he had remained at St. Anne's, Soho, and the health-giving breezes of the northern heights helped to give him the But as my voice suddenly went in the previous Church, an office he has held with distinction, and week, Sir Walter allowed me to go home a few in which he has fully maintained the best traditions days earlier than was arranged. From 1903 to 1907 he was conductor of the Bach Choir, from the members of which he received the gift of the great Cantor's complete works. In 1895 he was appointed professor of counterpoint at the Royal College of Music, in succession to Mr. W. S. Enough has been said to show that so original a conception and such a charming combination of ideas and exponents opens up a rich vein of creative possibilities. Here, in this

Dr. Davies has contributed articles and criticisms | seal of permanence upon things hitherto only tentatively to The Record since the year 1898. In a recent issue of that periodical he sounded a somewhat pessimistic note in regard to church music in England, when he said:

It is an incontestable fact that slovenly rendering of Church music is the rule and not the exception in thousands of our churches week after week. Side by side with this may be found such care, such excellence in concert music, at Competition Festivals and elsewhere, as would place our average church choirs beneath contempt. It is a grave national reproach.

He has lectured on musical subjects at various places, notably at Birmingham University last year, when he discoursed on 'Church Music' and 'Modern Harmonic Basis.' He has been an acceptable speaker at the Church Congress. the new edition of Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians' he contributed two erudite and exhaustive articles on Counterpoint. A specimen of his literary style is furnished in the final paragraph of the article on Invertible Counterpoint:

It is certain that few technical powers give such freedom to inspiration as the mastery of part-writing. Basses that will make good trebles, melodies that are possible as basses, and inner parts that are worthy to take the place of either treble or bass, are neither always possible nor always desirable. But the power to write them at will, which the art of inversion teaches, is invaluable. It is obviously perfected constructive ability that favours perfect expression of feeling. Exact balance of that which we call construction with that which we call inspiration is rare indeed. have been many composers, and indeed whole periods of musical development, preponderantly intellectual, while others have been distinguished for almost reckless emotional enterprise. It is to the works of men who, like Palestrina and Bach, reconcile both sides of the art, that we may well turn for the true examples of such musical mechanism as invertible counterpoints. They bring their best inspiration to the best construction of which they, or rather their age, may be capable. They show us how to combine the joy of freedom with the dignity of restraint. They are servants of laws not less than we are, but they find their service perfect freedom. They not only instil abounding life into more appropriate conclusion to this biographical sketch of one of our most gifted composers could be furnished than the following words kindly supplied by Sir Walter Parratt:

'A quarter of a century ago, when I succeeded Sir George Elvey at Windsor, I found among the choristers a boy with a grave countenance—I do not think any boy ever was as solemn as Walford Davies looked—he had a voice of no great volume, but of sympathetic quality: his ear was perfect, his musicianship remarkable. He was, of course, a leader among the boys, and taught them to sing music outside their chapel work with excellent From the chorister's desk he passed to the organ-loft, and surely no organist ever had a more capable helper. He played the best organ music with a clear discrimination of style, and I often had compliments paid to me which might have been embarrassing, as the player was not myself but Davies.

'His accompaniments were always in perfect accord with the music he was rendering. He could and did transpose the most difficult works when need arose without hesitation, without flaw. It was clear that Davies found his chief pleasure in the older church music. In these days, when the more austere emotions seem to be vanishing from the world, it was remarkable to find in one so young such a sincere sense of the beauty which lies behind the dignified music of past centuries.

'It must not be supposed that Davies was without a sense of fun. This was by no means absent, but after the occasion passed his expression generally relapsed into its usual serious aspect. These characteristics have developed consistently, and I am glad to say that our intercourse has every intellectual device, but they assiduously cultivate the latter for the sake of the former. They obey old laws and silently enact new ones, setting their own particular which I hope will last my life—and a little longer. ripened from those early days into a friendship

FOLK-SONGS AND DANCES AT STATIONERS' HALL.

An entertainment of a novel and interesting nature was provided by the Livery Club of the Worshipful Company of Musicians on May 20 at Stationers' Hall. Upon the conclusion of the banquet—presided over by Mr. Alfred H. Littleton, President of the Club—the guests adjourned to the Court Room to enjoy the pleasures of songs and dances of olden times. It was claimed, and justly so, that these songs and dances were genuine products of the English people, popular' in possession and practice, and, were not extracted from fusty old tomes, but they were obtained, note by note, step by step, during the last few years from country singers and dancers—the songs in the Western and the dances in the Midland

Sharp—contained a necessary warning against confounding folk-music which has been unconsciously evolved by the unlettered classes, with the artistic creations of cultivated musicians, 'the two types being generically distinct, not only in the manner of their birth, but also in the finished product.' To quote further from the programme notes:

Folk-music is the ideal conception of natural, non-educated minds, invented with the single purpose of satisfying primitive desires. Its essential marks are simplicity, spontaneity and sincerity. The folk-song is thus wholly devoid of technical complexity, and in neither words nor boy,' is cast in the Æolian mode and was music is there evident the hand of the trained craftsman. The music of the people appeals primarily, therefore, to the emotions rather than to the intellect. Consequently, if the listener would enjoy to the full the fare that is here spread before him, he must put off the habit of the critic, divest himself of preconceived notions, seek not to analyse what he hears nor compare it with the art-music of the concert room, but prepare himself to receive impressions that are at once simple, direct, and elemental in character. If he can adopt this attitude, he will enjoy a sumptuous feast of melody, obtained from an old dame living near Gray's Inn Road. A native of Woolwich, this elderly songstress had passed the greater part of hermore or less-three-score years and ten, in the neighbourhood of Tottenham Court Road, a region not altogether suggestive of folk-song amenities. But, as Mr. Sharp says, 'in the old days folk-songs were sung by everybody, by the inhabitants of towns just as much as by those living in country districts'; we venture to add, as much by the dwellers near Gray's Inn Road as by those who breathe the air of grazing fields.

> After some introductory remarks on folk-songs by Mr. Sharp, the post-prandial proceedings began with five folk-songs, sung by Miss Mattie Kay with sweet simplicity of manner and great charm of voice. The enunciation of her words and the naturalness of her expression were above all praise and made a deep impression upon a very musical audience.

To this succeeded a dainty ditty, daintily sung, having a most haunting melody, especially the piquant strain to the last line of each verse, 'Gently, Johnny my Jingalo.' We give the first and last verses of this fascinating folk-song:

I put my hand all in her own, Fair maid is a lily O! She said: If you love me alone Come to me quietly, Do not do me injury; Gently, Johnny my Jingalo.

I took her to the church next day, Fair maid is a lily O! The birds did sing, and she did say: Come to me quietly, Do not do me injury; Gently, Johnny my Jingalo.

The third song in the programme 'The coasts of High Barbary,' was of a nautical nature. Its melody was taken down from the lips of an old sailor who, appropriately enough, had settled at Bridgwater. The song perchance was a capstan chanty, and the repetition of the second and fourth lines of each of its nine verses gave it a flavour of antiquity.

Then followed an amusing amorous Somersetshire ballad entitled 'O No, John.' Whatever may have been the character of this love-stricken John, it is evident that the 'creature' he courted could not refrain from saying 'No' to his questions, judged by the 'No' of the refrain. Here are the first and last verses:

On yonder hill there stands a creature;
Who she is I do not know.
I'll go and court her for her beauty;
She must answer Yes or No.
O No John! No John! No John! No!

O hark! I hear the church bells ringing:
Will you come and be my wife?
Or, dear Madam, have you settled
To live single all your life?
O No John! No John! No!

The second part of the evening's entertainment had its chief interest in Morris Dances and Children's Games, interspersed with songs. The Morris Dance was so well discussed by Mr. H. C. Macilwaine, who has given so much attention to the subject, in The Musical Times of December, 1906 (p. 802), that there is no need to quote largely from the programme-notes concerning this ancient terpsichorean recreation. In regard to its performance, however, we are told that

The Morris dance proper is performed by six men, in two rows of three, standing vis- \hat{a} -vis. There is, however, the Morris Jig, which is a solo dance. Of this variety the 'Bacca Pipes Jig,' always danced to the ancient tune of 'Green Sleeves,' is the most famous. This is performed after the manner of a sword dance over two churchwarden pipes placed crosswise on the turf. According to custom, a mistake leading to the breaking of one of the pipes is paid for by a fine of a shilling, which is expended in the purchase of refreshment for the company.

As to the music which accompanies the dance, Mr. Sharp says:

Every Morris dance, and there are innumerable varieties, has its own proper tune to which it is always danced. The traditional accompanying instrument is the pipe-and-tabor, or, to give it its more familiar title, the whittle-and-dub. Of recent years, however, the whittle has fallen into disuse and has been displaced by the fiddle or concertina.

'Morris on,' the tune played at the entrance of the dancers, is known by the name of 'Hey Diddle Dis,' and is a traditional air of Gloucestershire associated with the Morris dancers of that county. 'Hunting the Squirrel' is the title of a Morris dance which refers to a custom, still observed in certain Somersetshire and other villages, of hunting the squirrel on Good Friday. 'The animal is no doubt associated in some occult way with Judas Iscariot, probably on account of its red colour.' The remaining Morris dances performed on this occasion were 'Bacca Pipes' (the music of which is referred to above) and 'Shepherd's Hey,' concluding with the 'Morris off.'

The dances and songs were admirably performed by girls and boys of the Esperance Club, under the able direction of Miss Neal. These young folks came from a poor district of London, and were suitably dressed in village attire—the girls, who work in factories, in bright-coloured costumes with bells attached, and the boys in the quaint garb of the Morris dancers, wearing stove-pipe hats. The dances were executed with wonderful precision and accuracy, the girl who so skilfully performed the Morris Jig, called 'Bacca Pipes,' winning rounds and rounds of applause, while the songs were rendered in so artless and refined a manner, the words being perfectly distinct, that they excited One song, 'Mowing the warmest approbation. the barley,' had the refrain:

> Where are you going to, my pretty maid? Where are you going, my honey? Going over the hills, kind sir, she said, To my father a mowing the barley.

Immediately following this, as an interlude between the verses, the singers (girls) imitated 'mowing the barley,' while they hummed a most fascinating melody suited to the action of the scythe.

A most delightful feature of the evening's entertainment were the Children's Games, three in number, and entitled 'When I was a young girl,' 'Old Roger,' and 'London Bridge.' Concerning these juvenile recreations Mr. Sharp says:

Many of the singing games that are still being played by English children are of great antiquity and contain references to ancient customs that have long been obsolete. In this respect children's games are even more remarkable than either folk-songs or dances. It is, no doubt, as Mrs. Gomme has pointed out, the dramatic interest of these games which has made them so attractive to children, and which has led to their preservation.

In 'Old Roger,' for instance, the motive of the story turns upon the ancient custom of planting a tree—in this case an apple-tree—over the grave of a dead man, in the belief that his spirit would pass into it. The dead man resents the robbery of the fruit of the tree, possession of which would give power over his soul or spirit.

What shall be said of the tiny mites who enchantingly played the children's games? Daintily dressed in red, yellow, or blue, their pretty movements and artless winsomeness touched all hearts as they combined song and dance in tuneful measure. At the close of the performance, The Lord Chief Justice of England (Lord Alverstone), in proposing a vote of thanks to the performers, said how pleased they all were with so charming and refined an entertainment. Several eminent musicians who were present were much touched by the singing and dancing of these poor children of the Esperance Club, and there can be no doubt that the entertainment was one of the most successful given by the Livery Club or the Musicians' Company in recent years.

A pipe and tabor, in addition to some other ancient instruments from the collection of Mr. Arthur F. Hill, were shown in a small case in the reception room.

As an interesting sidelight upon old English music and dancing, we give two illustrations—photographed for this article (on p. 372 and below)—from the precious volume in the British Museum (Department of MSS.) known as 'Queen Mary's Psalter.' This Psalter, in Latin—which also contains Canticles, Te Deum, Athanasian Creed and Litany—is preceded by a pictorial Bible history with descriptive text, partly in rhyming verse, in French, and by a Calendar. It is a vellum MS. of 319 leaves, measuring $10\frac{7}{4}$ -in. in depth and $6\frac{7}{4}$ -in. in width, and is profusely decorated in the finest style of early 14th century English art.

From some valuable notes contributed by Dr. G. F. Warner, Keeper of the MSS., we learn that this MS. was probably executed for some private patron, possibly Thomas Earl of Lancaster, who was beheaded in 1322. Nothing definite is known of its history, however, before the 16th century, when it belonged to Thomas Manners, first Earl of Rutland of that family, who died in 1543. Henry, the second Earl, was imprisoned at the accession of Queen Mary, which may account for the fact that in October, 1553, the MS. was about to be taken abroad, but was detained by Baldwin Smith, a London Customs officer, and given by him to the Queen. For this reason the volume is commonly known as 'Queen Mary's Psalter.' The binding,

AN OLD FOLK-SINGER.

which dates from the entry of the Psalter into the Royal Library, has Mary's badge worked in gold thread in the centre, and other Tudor badges engraved on the gilt clasp fittings.

So much for the history of this wonderful book. As to its contents, Dr. Warner says: 'The most characteristic feature of the MS. is the use made of the lower margins of the leaves from the beginning of the Psalter onwards. As if to relieve the monotony of the religious subjects in the text, these are filled with tinted drawings in which the artist has given free play to his facile pen and lively imagination. They are similar in style to the Old Testament drawings already noticed, but from the special nature of the subjects and their graphic delineation of contemporary English life, they are still more interesting.'

Our two illustrations from this MS. have been photographed (full size) from the lower margins of ff. 173b and 174, they being facing folios. Do not these 14th century pictures speak for themselves in their old-world charm of graceful design?

Occasional Motes.

As a further contribution to the biographical sketch of George P. Bridgetower, which appeared in our last issue, the following curious letter is offered. It was written by the mulatto violinist's father to Dr. Arnold, in connection with the boy's appearances at the oratorio performances at Drury Lane Theatre. The letter, which is undated, is printed literatim from the original in the possession of Mr. John S. Bumpus and by his kind permission:

Mr. Bridgtower would be glad to have a decisive answer from Doctor Arnold, pro or con, in regard of his son's performance at the oratorio's we never as yet put hand to paper and do not mean to do so now, you are a man of Honour, 50£ sterling this Currency was the agreement in the presence of your Noble Friend Mr. Paul, and George was to perform Eleven times the money to be delivered into the hands of Mr. Paul when the aforesaid business is terminated if you do not mean my son should fulfill the engagement let me know instantaneously per bearer in two words, yes (or) no as my business is to be settled at 3 o'clock, if you answer in the negative I shall leave London for 8 days to calm my spirits after being thus agitated by blood hounds.

Good appetite.

The recent visit of the King and Queen to Sweden recalls the honourable part that music played in a little-known embassy from this country to the northern kingdom in the 17th century. Bulstrode Whitelocke, Keeper of the Great Seal, and son of a musical judge, was 'pitched upon' in the summer of 1653 and ordered to proceed to Sweden with convenient speed for the purpose of making certain treaties with Queen Christina. His 'Journal of the Swedish Ambassy' forms highly entertaining reading for several reasons—not the least being the author's Pepysian self-complacency. In selecting his retinue, he not only engaged two trumpeters, but appointed one of his chaplains rector chori, and described two of the gentlemen of his suite as being 'chiefly for musick.' The total number of his musical force is nowhere expressly stated; but we are led to infer that it must have been a very fine body of performers, for the Queen of Sweden's Italian musicians 'came to hear the musick' in Whitelocke's house, and 'gave it great and due commendation.' The music at a ball given by her Majesty consisted of 'seven or eight violins, with base viols, flutes, and citterns, perfecte masters' praise from these was therefore praise indeed. The efforts of a certain church band and chorus proved not quite so satisfactory to the Ambassador's critical ear, for they 'did sing and play in his presence reasonably well, although not exactly'; but they were rewarded, notwithstanding, with a gratuity of '40 ricksdollers, whereof,' gravely comments the diarist, 'they were nothing shye in the acceptance.'

A warm welcome is evidently in store for the Sheffield conductor, the two hundred members of the Sheffield Choir, and their friends to the number of one hundred accompanying them during their tour in Canada next November. Whilst it is to be hoped our Canadian cousins will enjoy hearing our British choir, it is evident from the two official letters which the Lord Mayor of Sheffield has received from the Mayor of Toronto and the Executive of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, and which we subjoin, that music and business will be a combined feature of this remarkable voyage. We understand that Dr. Harriss looks for a practical result, beneficial to both countries commercially as well as artistically, from the outcome of his propaganda for musical reciprocity between our Overseas Dominions and the Mother Country.

To the Rt. Hon. The Lord Mayor of Sheffield, Sheffield, England.

MY LORD MAYOR.—Dr. Charles Harriss, of Earnscliffe, Ottawa, has intimated to me the probability of our being honoured with a visit from the Sheffield Choir and its friends, some time during the month of October next.

friends, some time during the month of October next.

It is therefore on behalf of the Corporation of the city and the citizens of Toronto that I write, for the purpose of extending a cordial invitation not only to the members of the famous Sheffield Choir, but also to those ladies and gentlemen who may accompany it, and to assure you and them (for I am pleased to learn that you are to be of their number) that we shall be delighted to tender you all a hearty welcome, and do our utmost to make your sojourn with us a most pleasant and interesting one.

We in Canada are always pleased to welcome our kindred from across the sea, and we shall be doubly delighted to honour the Sheffield Choir and to do our best to make your entire party feel that you are by no means strangers in a strange land.

I have the honour to be, My Lord Mayor, Yours respectfully, (Signed) JOSEPH OLIVER,

Mayor of Toronto.

His Worship The Lord Mayor of Sheffield, England.

Your Worship,—I am directed by the Executive Council of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association to inform you that they have learned with a great deal of pleasure of the contemplated visit of the Sheffield Choir to Canada. On behalf of the Association I am glad to be able to extend to you and to the members of the choir, as well as to the friends by whom they may be accompanied, a hearty welcome to Canada, coupled with the assurance that members of our Association individually will do everything in their power to make your visit both profitable and enjoyable.

I have the honour to be, your Worship's humble and obedient servant,

(Signed) G. M. MURRAY, Secretary.

Ottawa joins hands with Toronto in the welcome from that part of Greater Britain which, though atmospherically cold—according to Mr. Rudyard Kipling in 'Our Lady of the Snows'—is anything but below zero in its warm-heartedness. The following is the text of a resolution recently moved by the City of Ottawa:

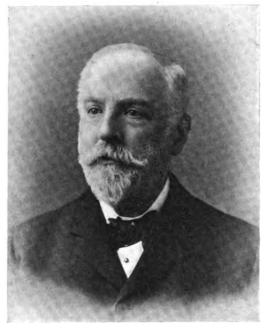

That the Municipal Corporation of Ottawa learns with pleasure of the intended visit to Canada and Ottawa of the Sheffield Musical Union in October next. That we desire to express to the Lord Mayor of Sheffield, to Mr. J. H. Lawson, and Dr. H. Coward, and to all those who are arranging for the visit of these musicians to Canada, our appreciation for their efforts, and our assurance that the Sheffield Musical Union will be heartily welcomed in our city.

Elgar's 'Wand of Youth' suite (No. 1) has recently been performed with success at Cologne. The Kölner Tageblatt of May 5 says:

The Musikalische Gesellschaft again had a great evening of choice music both classical and modern, all under Steinbach's direction. First on the programme was a Suite by Elgar, refined music which, as such, reached its highest point in the charming slumber scene. It is rich in beautiful tone-colour. A minuet in the olden style reminds one somewhat of similar compositions by Reger. The movement entitled 'Sun dance' is splendid, and the orchestration is always clear and discreet.

The 'Wand of Youth' suite was performed by the King's Private Band, under Sir Walter Parratt, at their Majesties' Court held at Buckingham Palace on May 22.

Those of our readers who from time to time have enjoyed the hospitality and the music of the Madrigal Society may be glad to see the portrait of the late Mr. J. Edward Street, for so many years the genial secretary of that venerable institution. The fact that

Mr. Oscar W. Street has succeeded his father in that office is a matter of satisfaction mingled with congratulation to all concerned, for he is sure to maintain those excellent traditions of the Street family which have so long prevailed at the Madrigal Society.

The attention which is now given to music and musical literature in public libraries is exemplified in a 'Catalogue of music and musical literature' in the Central Library, Cardiff. This quarto publication of seventy-five closely-printed pages compares favourably with the 'tiny pamphlet of eight pages, price twopence,' published twenty years ago. During this full-score period the musical section of the library has been built up under the fostering care of Mr. William Ronnfeldt, vice-chairman of the libraries committee, with what result may be seen by a perusal of this industriously compiled catalogue. The system of classification adopted is the well-known Dewey Decimal in its latest form, a method that is widely used in both European and American libraries. If the system, with its profusion of subject-headings and sub-headings, might seem a little complicated to the man-in-the-street, the full index at the end of the book—covering more than sixteen pages, printed in double columns—comes to his aid in facilitating reference to the body of the catalogue. As this index 'includes references to every subject, author, composer, and librettist in the catalogue,' what more can be desired? One defect in this excellent publication is thus apologised for in the prefatory note: 'Readers versed in foreign languages will notice the absence of the usual accents. The catalogue was set by machinery, and as accents were not available, they had reluctantly to be left out.' Yet this does not seriously detract from the practical utility of a publication that reflects great credit upon Mr. John Ballinger, the able chief-librarian of the Central Library, Cardiff, and those associated with him in administering the good work committed to their charge.

Sir Frederick Bridge has expressed himself as being greatly delighted with his Canadian tour. He told an interviewer at Woodstock that he has found Canadian people not quite so barbarous as he imagined, or as report made them out to be. He found the country a good deal larger than he believed possible, and he expressed doubts as to whether he would ever be able to get out of it again! In regard to the renderings of the cathedral anthems in the various cities visited by him, Sir Frederick said that the performance of Wesley's 'Wilderness' at London (Ontario) was 'perfection'! At Toronto the choir of men and boys trained by Dr. Ham sang so well that the Westminster organist remarked 'It is all nonsense to say that there are no good boys' voices in Canada.' At Montreal the performance was so excellent that he had nothing but words of praise for it, while at Ottawa the choir sang 'Crossing the bar' as perfectly as he ever remembered to have heard it. All this is intensely gratifying to well-wishers of English cathedral music in the mother-country, as well as to those who dwell in the daughter Dominion across the sea.

The Lord Mayor will take the chair at the Mansion House on Tuesday, June 23, at 5 o'clock, when, on behalf of the committee, Sir Frederick Bridge will present an address of thanks to the Principal of the Guildhall School of Music for the self-sacrifice he has shown in connection with a recent action for libel. A cheque will also be presented to him as a testimonial of esteem from the signatories of the address. In the evening Dr. Cummings will be entertained at a banquet at De Keyser's Royal Hotel, Sir Frederick Bridge presiding. Tickets may be obtained of the Hon. Secretaries: Dr. J. E. Borland, 81, Bromley Road, Catford, S.E.; Mr. F. Harold Hankins, 26, Goldhurst Terrace, South Hampstead, N.W.; and Dr. T. L. Southgate, 19, Manor Park, Lee, S.E. For the convenience of those wishing to sign the address, sheets for this purpose are lying at the Royal Academy of Music, Royal College of Music, Guildhall School of Music, Trinity College of Music, Royal College of Organists, Messrs. Novello, and with the Sectional Secretaries of the various branches of the Incorporated Society of Musicians.

A leading London newspaper has been misleading its readers in the account of the opening of the Anglo-French Exhibition by the Prince of Wales. They were told 'Then the chorus gave an old English madrigal, unaccompanied by music, and at the conclusion of the melody the crowd,' and so on. Here then is a new definition of the oft-discussed term 'madrigal'—it is a musical composition unaccompanied by music. Dictionary-makers please copy.

THE MAY QUEEN.

This year marks the jubilee of Sterndale Bennett's cantata 'The May Queen.' Composed for the first Leeds Musical Festival, the work was produced on Wednesday evening, September 8, 1858, in the new Town Hall, which had been opened by Queen Victoria on the previous day. The principal vocalists were Madame Clara Novello, Miss Dolby, Mr. Sims Reeves and Mr. Weiss, the composer himself conducting his new work. They have all joined the majority, but two of the artists who appeared in the first (miscellaneous) part of the programme are still living, Madame Arabella Goddard and Sir Charles Santley, as is also Mr. Fred R. Spark, then acting secretary of the Festival.

In recording the event THE MUSICAL TIMES said:

The second part of this concert comprised a MS. pastoral called 'The May Queen,' by Professor Bennett (the first time of its performance), which was admirably sung by Madame Clara Novello, Miss Dolby, Mr. Sims Reeves and Mr. Weiss. The music of this agreeable composition is simple, unaffected and excellent; and the whole work deserves the highest commendation.—Musical Times, October, 1858, p. 323.

In the admirably compiled biography of his father, Mr. J. R. Sterndale Bennett furnishes some interesting details concerning the composition of 'The May Queen.' It appears that the librettist, Mr. H. F. Chorley, had delivered the book of the cantat between nine and ten years before Bennett set to work on the music. The Athenaum (of which Chorley was the music critic) of May 1, 1858, contained the following paragraph on this subject:

It is possible that at the Leeds Festival Prof. Bennett's May-Cantata will be produced. This he is known to have had in hand for many years (as the Author of the words desires us to state) long before Mr. Macfarren's justly successful Cantata to Mr. Oxenford's verse, was brought forward.

Bennett had composed the overture fourteen years earlier (in 1844) as a concert piece, and named it 'Marie du Bois,' after his fiancée, Miss Mary Ann Wood; but it was never performed until he made use of it as the introduction to 'The May Queen.' In July, 1858, the year of the Leeds Festival, Bennett and his family went to Eastbourne, where they found quarters at the 'Gilbert Arms,' an old-fashioned hostelry at which they had spent a short summer holiday in the previous year. There 'The May Queen' was composed. To quote from Mr. J. R. Sterndale Bennett's 'Life' of his father:

In a remote corner of the rambling building there was a secluded room, and in a bow-window overlooking a large walled-in garden, Bennett placed his table and set to work. Direct from the house there were four ways in which he could start on the short walks which he liked constantly to take while composing: a path across the fields to 'Mill-Gap,' on the way to Willingdon; the two shady avenues towards Old Eastbourne and Southbourne; and the road, then bordered by wheat and clover fields, leading to the sea. Opposite the house was the small railway station and a telegraph office, to which he kept running across to transact Leeds Festival business. In due course he had written all his music except a chorus with soprano solo, to the not very inspiring words, 'With a laugh as we go round.' As this movement concerned the chief character in the piece it was important, but Bennett failed for some time to get any idea for it that suited him. One day, at his invitation, his wife, prepared herself to take a walk with him, and was surprised, after they had gone a few yards from the house, by his suddenly turning round and saying, 'We can go back now, the May Queen is finished.'

by John Hullah at St. Martin's Hall, December 8, 1858. On New Year's Day, 1859, 'The May Queen' was given at Windsor Castle before Queen Victoria, the Prince Consort and the Royal Family, including present King. The Philharmonic Society performed it on May 30, 1859. Towards the end of the year Bennett's 'graceful and delicate' music (to quote Chorley's words) found its way to a music hall in the region of the so-called 'New Cut,' as the following advertisement testifies:

MEYERBEER'S DINORAH AND STERNDALE BENNETT'S MAY QUEEN are sung nightly at the CANTERBURY HALL concerts. Comic vocalists—Messrs. George Hodson (the Irish comedian and mimic), W. J. Critchfield and E. W. Mackney. Fine Arts Gallery. The suite of Halls have been of its composer's refinement.

The first London performance of the work was given | re-decorated and beautified, and constitute one of the most unique and brilliant sights of the metropolis.—Musical World, December 24, 1859.

One of doubtless many jubilee performances of 'The May Queen' took place on April 27 at Hatfield Broad Oak, Essex, under the direction of the vicar of the parish, the Rev. F. W. Galpin. As an under-graduate at Cambridge, Mr. Galpin 'assisted' in a rendering of the work conducted by the composer; thus, from personal knowledge, he was able to impart to soloists, band and chorus traditional renderings of certain passages. At the same concert—which consisted entirely of Sterndale Bennett's music—the F minor Pianoforte concerto was played (soloist, Mr. B. W. Worton) in which occurs the lovely Several interesting pictures are added to the Barcarolle, a charmingly melodious movement typical

The 'six heads' are (1) Of the gamut; (2) Of the notes, their names, and proportion of distance from one another; (3) Of cliffs: (4) Of flats and sharps; (5) Of time; (6) Of the several keys in musick. Under the second head our unknown author says: 'A semibreve is performed in such a space of time as you may tell 1, 2, by the slow motion of a pendulum clock.' Under the fourth head he tells us that 'the nature of a flat is to make any note before which 'tis plac'd half a tone lower than it was before, and a sharp raises a note half a tone higher'; the natural sign had not then come into use. The fifth head is very quaintly expressed:

Fifthly, Concerning Time; of which there are Two Sorts used in this Book, Common and Tripla (sic); which, when understood, serves to direct you how to give every Note its due Length of Time in performing. Keeping of Time, is beating down the Hand or Foot, and taking it up again while you are singing. You may observe, That I told you, a Semibreve (which is counted for a whole Time) was so long as you might tell 1, 2, flowly by a Clock: So that in keeping starred tunes may be doubted. Under the last heading he says: 'There are some keys used in vocal and (particular) instrumental musick; but as they do not concern this undertaking, I shall take no notice of them.' He concludes his 'Introduction' in these words:

Thus I have gone through what I proposed as necessary to the understanding of this Book, which I hope will be candidly received; and that all true lovers of PSALMODY will be encouraged in some Measure hereby to the Learning this Noble and Delightful Art.

At the back of the title-page to 'A Table of all the Psalms and Hymns in this Supplement,' placed at the end of the book, is the following interesting 'Note':

All PSALMS of Prayer, Mourning, Distress, &c., are to be sung to grave, flat Tunes; as London Old, Bristol, Martyrs, Manchester, All Saints, The Penitents, &c. And all PSALMS of Thanksgiving, Praise, &c., to airy, sharp Tunes; as St. David's, London New, St. Mary, St. Matthew, St. James, St. Anne, St. Luke, St. John, &c.

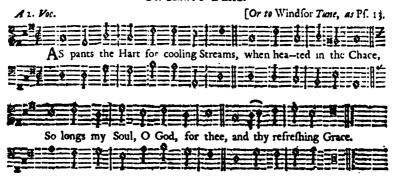

From this we learn that minor tunes were regarded as 'flat tunes,' and that those in major keys were 'airy,

We may now turn to the music of this sixth edition of the Supplement to the New Version. The tunes starred in the Table (index) as being new number twenty-eight, which agrees with the 'near 30 new tunes, composed by the best masters' stated on the title-page. Among them is the tune 'St. James,' by Courteville, but as this appeared at least eleven years earlier (in 1697), the newness of some of the other starred tunes may be doubted. So far as is known,

With the above facsimile before him the reader will triple rhythm in Matthew Wilkins's 'A Book of observe that the last line of 'St. Anne' contains some passing-notes which have been eliminated by modern editors, except the late Sir Robert Stewart in the 'Church Hymnal' (Ireland). These passing-notes 'Church Hymnal' (Ireland). These passing-notes were retained by Vincent Novello in his 'Psalmist' organist of St. Anne's, Soho, which church in all probability gave the name to the tune; moreover, National Psalmist' (1842), nor in 'A Collection of Psalm and Hymn Tunes' (forming Part I. of 'The People's Music Book'), edited by Iames Tunes and Indiana Psalm and Hymn Tunes' (forming Part I. of 'The People's Music Book'), edited by James Turle and Edward Taylor in 1844, it may be assumed that the present entirely syllabic form of 'St. Anne' dates Hart and Church were contemporaries of Croft, and from about 1849. The type was some time of the Psalms of David' (c. 1720), edited by Philip Hart, and also in John Church's 'Introduction to Psalmody' (1723). AN IMPRESSIVE FUNERAL SERVICE.

At no time do the sacred strains which float through Westminster Abbey fall on the ear with greater leading from the Nave to the West Cloister, could be impressiveness than at the funeral of one whom the nation is proud to honour. On such an occasion the jarring notes of sectarian strife and the discordant our portion,' sung as the funeral procession slowly din of political warfare are hushed in silence, while a great and representative assemblage of British the building the choir sang the opening sentences to people—which includes the Heir Apparent and hardy sons of toil—foregather in the great walhalla of Westminster to pay their last tribute of respect to a Perthshire, Purcell's beautiful setting of Thou statesman who has faithfully served his country. So knowest, Lord, the secrets of our hearts, was not sung.) it was at the funeral service, on April 27, of the ex-Premier, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman.

The first notes of music came from Edward the Confessor's Chapel, behind the great altar, when a quartet of trombonists (under the direction of Dr. Borland) played the Funeral Music composed S. S. Wesley's deeply expressive anthem, 'All go by Henry Purcell for the obsequies of Queen Mary II. Then Dr. W. G. Alcock, assistant-organist of the Abbey—under whose able direction the service music was admirably rendered—played Rachmaninoff's Prelude in C sharp minor. To this succeeded, in strong and not unwelcome contrast, Beethoven's three Equales for trombones, music that is both dignified and tender in expression. Two organ solos followed:
Dr. Basil Harwood's 'Requiem Æternam' and Tchaikovsky's Funeral March. If nothing else, the Russian portion of this preludial selection served to accentuate the solemn simplicity and perfect (in Saul) was played on the organ. appropriateness of the funeral music, vocal and instrumental, composed by our own countrymen.

At the hour of noon, and through the open door When the coffin had been placed under the lantern and all had taken their places, Psalm xc. was chanted unto one place,' was sung, its loftiness of utterance and its depth of expression making it worthy of the venerable pile and the mournful occasion. Wesley's music found a fitting sequel in Goss's 'I heard a voice from heaven.' And then came Dr. Croft's noble tune 'St. Anne's,' to Dr. Watts's fine old hymn 'Our God, our help in ages past,' sung by the great congregation, which by reason of its majestic simplicity proved to be one of the most moving features in the whole service. As the coffin was borne along the Nave to the great west door, Handel's immortal 'Dead March

A VOICE FROM THE PRESBYTERIAN PAST.

In no section of the Christian Church has the attitude towards music more completely changed than in the Presbyterian Church, not only in Scotland, its true home, but south of the Tweed. Organs were anathema, and 'human hymns' were abhorred as being uninspired. One has only to attend a service at United Free St. George's Church, Edinburgh, of which Mr. Alfred Hollins is the organist, to realize the immense difference between the old days of ponderous psalm-singing and the bright service-music Even Regent Square Church, in London where Edward Irving was wont to attract fashionable folk by his pulpit oratory—now has an organ, and yet it is only a few years ago that a member of that congregation said he (or she, more probably) would give a thousand pounds 'to keep a kist-o'-whustles oot o' the kirk'!

But we must turn to the 'voice of the Presbyterian past' which the Rev. A. F. Munro has gramaphoned, so to speak, from the session records of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, South Shields. He says, in the columns of the St. Paul's Monthly Messenger for May, that:

Under date of February, 1819, the minute book of the old Anti-Burgher session records various incidents which had apparently convulsed the congregation with excitement.

For the benefit of those unacquainted with the Presbyterian system of church polity, it may be observed that the session consists of the minister of the church and a body of elders, who rule and govern the church and its services, but who are responsible to the Presbytery as being a higher court of the church politic. One of the incidents in the above extract has reference to the oft-debatable and thorny question of music—such as it was at South Shields in the year 1819. Here are the details, as set forth by Mr. Munro:

There was apparently good ground for suspecting that the congregation was in a state of terrible declension, for a member had complained to the Presbytery that the congregation was being polluted with a great evil, namely, the use of music-books in the service of God. The Presbytery asked the session to report on the truth of the matter. meeting was held, and the complainer asked to state his case. He said that he had twice seen music-books open in the church, and his evidence was corroborated by another witness. The conductor of music, being present, was asked to tell what he knew of the matter. He said that on two occasions music-books had been opened by two singers at the commencement of Psalm,' but that the books had been immediately taken from them.

Perchance these two singers were promptly excommunicated by their fellow Anti-Burghers as being 'vera sinfu' creeturs.'

Dr. J. Kendrick Pyne has resigned the organistship of Manchester Cathedral, to which he was appointed in 1875, on the ground of the many other duties which claim his time and attention. Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, acting-organist of Carlisle Cathedral, has been appointed to succeed Dr. Pyne, therefore a new appointment will have to be made at Canterbury Cathedral, as quite recently Mr. Nicholson had been selected to fill that post, soon to become vacant by the removal of Dr. H. C. Perrin to Canada.

Dr. G. F. Huntley, organist of St. Peter's Church, Eaton Square, and Mr. C. W. Perkins, organist of Birmingham Town Hall, have been appointed Professors of the organ at the Royal Academy of Music. Two good men and true.

The oak case has been designed by Mr. L. A. Hayes, the Vicar's churchwarden, who has planned the organ chamber built specially for the reception of the new instrument. The organ, which stands at the north side of the chancel, has a double front, facing south and west respectively.

In order to obtain the necessary height for the proper speaking of the pipes, the floor of the spacious organ chamber has been sunk three feet below the level of the church, thus the common fault of so many cabined, cribbed, and confined organ chambers has been avoided. Of the four stops in the Great organ, the open diapason is of that churchlike and dignified tone so long associated with Messrs. Walker's instruments, while the dulciana is of so small a scale as to form a delicate accompaniment to the Swell organ stops. The scheme of the Swell organ, with its octave coupler, affords scope for great variety, and the lieblich bourdon on the Pedal organ provides a second sixteen feet stop, forming a suitable bass to the softest manual stops, a most desirable adjunct to the organ, especially as the bourdon is of a large scale. It will be observed that, with the exception of the voix céleste, all the stops go throughout the compass of their respective manuals.

TWO FESTIVALS AT ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.

On May 4 the annual festival of the Sons of the Clergy was characterized by its usual musical import. The service, (Magnificat and Nunc dimittis) was the fine setting in E flat by Dr. G. F. Huntley, organist of St. Peter's Church, while Sir George Martin's inspiring music to 'Hail! gladdening Light' (John Keble's translation of a Greek hymn) furnished the anthem. Both these works were orchestrated specially for the occasion. The service, which began with Sullivan's 'In memoriam' overture, included Handel's 'Hallelujah' chorus and the 100th Psalm, sung to the time-honoured tune. Sir George Martin conducted, and Mr. Charles Macpherson occupied his accustomed place at the organ.

The thirty-eighth anniversary of the London Gregorian Association took place on the evening of May 21, with Dr. Warwick Jordan at the organ. As may be assumed, most of the service-music was of plainsong nature, the principal exception being the anthem, a setting of 'Lift up your heads,' by Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor.

DR. F. J. SAWYER.

We regret to record the death of Dr. FRANK JOSEPH SAWYER, which took place, after a short illness, at his residence, 55, Buckingham Place, Brighton, on April 29. Born at Brighton, June 19, 1857, he passed nearly the whole of his life at that seaside town, his few years of absence being when he was a student at the Leipzig Conservatorium and, immediately afterwards, as a pupil of Sir Frederick Bridge in London. He took the degree of Bachelor of Music at Oxford in 1877 and that of Doctor in 1884: he was also a Fellow of the Royal College of Organists. His only organ appointment was at St. Patrick's Church, Hove, which he held, up to the time of his lamented death, for more than thirty years. He was professor of sight-singing at the Royal College of Music, and in November last he was elected honorary secretary of the Royal College of Organists elected honorary secretary of the Royal College of Organists in succession to the late Dr. E. H. Turpin. As a Freemason he had just completed his year of office as Grand Organist of England.

Dr. Sawyer's compositions include an oratorio, 'Mary, the Virgin' (1884), recast as 'Star of the East' and produced at Virgin' (1864), recast as Star of the Last and produced as Brighton, December 12, 1889; three sacred cantatas, 'Jerusalem' (1880), 'The soul's forgiveness' (Chester Festival, 1894), and 'The widow of Nain' (female voices). His dramatic cantata 'Orpheus' won the prize of £100 offered by Messrs. Methven & Simpson in 1893, and he composed, for female voices, a cantata entitled 'The pageant.' His creative output included two Sclavish dances pageant. His creative output included two Sclavish dances for orchestra, a Concerstück in D for organ and orchestra (1890), a Romance for violin and pianoforte, in addition to various pianoforte pieces and technical exercises for the instrument, sight-singing manuals, a score-reading primer, anthems, part-songs, &c. He was the author of a primer on extemporization, and he collaborated with Sir Frederick Bridge in a theoretical text-book entitled 'A course of harmony' (1899). As a lecturer on musical subjects he was well known. A man of boundless energy and various activities, the death of Dr. Sawyer, in the prime of life, has called forth many expressions of sincere regret.

Mr. Richard White has just completed forty years' service as organist of Chapel Street Wesleyan Church, Penzance. The localized magazine of the church thus refers to Mr. White's long record of duties faithfully and efficiently discharged:

'Mr. White is deservedly respected by all who know him. As an organist his abilities are well known and recognised far and wide; as a teacher he is much beloved by his pupils. At the West Cornwall College, where he is brought into touch with upwards of a hundred young people, he is immensely popular, and we do not wonder at it, for he is always cheerful, patient, obliging and full of kindly thought and feeling. He is doing excellent work as conductor of the Penzance Choral Society in the development of musical taste and ability, and his work in this capacity will leave an impression for good upon the town and district.

As organist and choirmaster at Chapel Street it is impossible to speak too highly of the value of his services. The high level of excellence and the helpfulness of the musical part of our services, recognised by every one, owes nearly everything to his taste, ability and devotion. wish to express our appreciation of his kindly spirit and valued services.

Mr. White is to be warmly congratulated upon his double full-score of years' service, no less than upon the kindly feeling which has prompted the above appreciation of his work by the officers of the church he has served so well.

Mr. W. Wolstenholme is announced to give a series of organ recitals at All Saints' Church, Norfolk Square, Paddington, every Saturday in June at 5.30 p.m.

Mr. Edwin H. Lemare has been giving organ recitals in Canada with much success.

In the presence of a congregation numbering 3,000 persons, there was performed in the beautiful and spacious church of St. Michael's, Coventry, on April 30, the oratorio 'The Risen Lord,' composed by Dr. H. J. Edwards, of Barnstaple. Under the baton of the composer the work received an excellent rendering, its obvious sincerity, lofty aims, expressive treatment and skilled musicianship making a deep impression. The soloists were Madame Emily Squire, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Alfred Heather and Mr. S. J. The orchestra was largely composed of the Birmingham Symphony Orchestra, and the choruses were well sung by the festival choir. Mr. Walter Hoyle, organist of the church, rendered efficient aid at the organ.

Mendelssohn's 95th Psalm ('O come, let us worship') was sung at a special musical service held on Sunday afternoon, May 3, at the Collegiate Church of the Holy Trinity, Stratford-on-Avon. The choruses were sustained by the Stratford-on-Avon Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. Guernsey W. Webb, and the soloists were Mrs. Cecil D. Falcke and the Rev. H. D. Hughes, minor canon of Durham Cathedral. Mr. E. Roberts-West, organist of St. Alban's Church, Leamington, was at the organ.

SCHUMANN'S SYMPHONY IN B FLAT. By SIR GEORGE GROVE, C.B.

This is the earliest of Schumann's four published Symphonies. It was written, as he himself says, with a steel pen which he had picked up (surely Providence alone had placed it there) on Schubert's grave at Vienna. It was first performed at the Gewandhaus, Leipzig, on March 31, 1841, at a concert conducted by Mendelssohn, and was probably completed only shortly before that date.* Schumann had previously composed much both for the pianoforte and for the solo voice. His first twenty-four works (Op. 1 to 24) are for the pianoforte, and on completing these an accident turned him in the direction of song-writing. He at once began with the 'Myrthen' (Op. 25), and during the whole of the year 1840 wrote nothing else but songs. He then as suddenly turned to the orchestra, and composed the work now before us. But although this is his first published composition for the orchestra, it was not his first Symphony, since one in G minor had been played at a concert at Schneeberg early in January, 1833 † This, however, has not been published, and is not known, and it must therefore be inferred that, brilliant and interesting as it may be, it is a juvenile work, and unadapted for the public. The Symphony in B flat thus remains Schumann's first important orchestral work.

In a letter written to Dorn in the spring of 1839, he complains of the pianoforte as 'too narrow a field tor his thoughts,' and announces his intention of applying himself to orchestral writing to make up for his want of practice. In proof of his success Schumann might point with confidence to this Symphony in B flat. was written at the most happy period of his life, when the long-continued obstacles to his marriage to Clara Wieck had been overcome. The marriage took place, September 12, 1840, at the church of Schonfeld, near Leipzig, and he found himself in possession of a high and recognised position as a composer and authority in music. In a letter to Carl Kossmaly, dated May 9, 1841, written some six weeks after the performance of the Symphony, he says: 'I have now a household of my own, and my circumstances are different from what they were. The time since you last heard from me has passed in happiness and work. I wished for you to hear my Symphony. How happy I was at the performance !- I and others also, for it had such a favourable reception as I think no Symphony has had since Beethoven.

This state of things the music reflects very characteristically. So full was his mind and so great his energy that the composition of the entire work—of course without the scoring—is said to have taken him only four days. It might perhaps have been better if he had bestowed some of Beethoven's patience and consideration upon it. He is known to have entitled it originally 'Spring Symphony'; indeed, the very first mention of it which we possess gives it that name - Fancy! a whole Symphony, and a Spring Symphony, too.' The connection with the bursting season of spring was evidently his original idea, and he held it to the end, for he has left on record, in an inscription on a portrait of himself, that it was inspired two bars, he says, 'Beginning of a Symphony, suggested by a poem of Adolf Böttger's. To the Poet in remembrance, from Robert Schumann. Leipzig, October, 1842.' It is of all his orchestral works the most free from those clouds of melancholy which disturb and obscure many of his later works. Its tunefulness and fluency, and its happy expression, no less than the novelty of its material, the close and masterly manner in which it is treated, and the unbroken continuity with which one burst of emotion succeeds another throughout, are truly remarkable. No wonder it was well received. He thought, with a charming naiveté, that it had excited more sympathy than any Symphony since Beethoven. But it would be wrong to suppose that he rested on his oars even after such a feat. Six months afterwards he says, 'The Symphony lies quite behind me, and my eyes are fixed on fresh goals'—a good and characteristic instance of the impulsive progress which so distinguished him. How serious these 'goals' were may be inferred from the fact that before the end of the year he had composed two more Symphonies—that afterwards published as No. 4, in D minor, and the Overture, Scherzo, and Finale, in three movements only, like some well-known ones of Mozart's. The first movement of the Pianoforte concerto in A minor also belongs to this eventful year. The Symphony in B flat began its career at once, and was performed early in the next year [1842] at Hamburg; shortly afterwards in Russia. Its first performance in England was by the Philharmonic Society on June 5, 1854; the Overture, Scherzo, and Finale had been performed by the same Society on April 4 of the previous year (both conducted by Costa), and so on.

The first movement is full of brilliant thoughts and happy strokes of harmony, and there are few things in music of more elevating effect than the climax near the end, where a new and inspiriting phrase is given in simple harmony first by the strings and then by the full orchestra, with all the air of a hymn of thanksgiving and happiness. (See No. 6.) Nor are the other movements without their distinct and obvious points of novelty and interest. Of these two may be named-first, the passage which finally closes the Scherzo, and which is not only perfectly original but also of charming effect; and secondly, the trombone passage in the second portion of the Finale, which, though perhaps inspired by the first movement of Schubert's great Symphony in C—heard by Schumann for the first time at Leipzig only a few months before the composition of his work—is yet treated in its own way, so as to produce a solemn religious effect not easily forgotten.* The two Trios to the Scherzo are an innovation on established form, possibly suggested by Beethoven in the repetition of the Trio in his Fourth and Seventh Symphonies, but not actually found, to the writer's knowledge, in any Symphony before this one by Schumann. Indeed, the whole work is full of that earnestness and serious individuality which are among Schumann's most marked characteristics. The words which stood over the orchestra of the old Gewandhaus-Hall in Leipzig- 'Res severa est verum gaudium,' would form a not unfit motto for his life. To him, as to Mendelssohn, a 'great joy' was always a 'serious thing.' That precious gift of gaiety and light-heartedness which is so enviable, and which Mendelssohn possessed in so large a measure, Schumann probably never knew, at least he never shows it. But in recompense Nature gave him other things equally precious. She endowed him with ambition, force, passion, imagination, tenderness, love of beauty—as well as with great purity and nobility, by a poem of Adolf Böttger's. § After quoting the first and a truly remarkable power of enlisting the sympathies and confidence of his hearers, and attaching them to him as if by an intimate personal bond.

Of the truth of this we could desire no better evidence than the progress which Schumann's works have made in this country. If we look through the concert-programmes and musical criticisms of fifty years ago, it is impossible not to be struck by the comparison between the timid, apologetic manner in which concert-givers then presented his works to their audiences, or the distrust and resistance which they excited in certain quarters, and on the other hand the assured position they have now acquired, and the uniform respect and admiration with which they are received.

Andante un poco maestoso: Allegro molto vivace. Larghetto.

Scherzo: Molto vivace, with Trio I. Molto più vivace. Trio II. (No tempo).

Finale: Allegro animato e grazioso.

1. The Introduction is a splendid feature in three out of Schumann's five Symphonic works. Here it is Andante un poco maestoso, and opens, without preface, with an energetic phrase in the horns and trumpets only:

It is a curious and characteristic token of the boldness with which Schumann scored a Symphony, without even an elementary acquaintance with the instruments, that he originally wrote this phrase a third lower*:

But when the work came to rehearsal (under Mendelssohn), it appeared that the notes G and A, being 'stopped' notes—that is to say, not in the natural scale of the instrument—could hardly be heard, and the passage had to be transposed a third higher. This was for long a great joke with him. Writing to Mendelssohn from Dresden, October 22, 1845, Schumann says: 'You are now in the middle of my Symphony' (rehearing for the Gewandhaus Concert). 'You remember the first rehearsal in 1841, and the stopped notes in the trumpets and horns, at the beginning? It was exactly as if they had caught cold, and I am still compelled to laugh whenever I think of it.'

II. In the Allegro the opening phrase of the Introduction, being in the strings, is put back to its original place:

[•] It reminds one of the curious fact mentioned in B. R. Haydon's biography, that some time after he had become a painter he 'did not know that there was any other oil than boiled oil.' Happy, simple, artistic ignorance'

The second subject of this movement is heralded by three bars of reiterated notes on the horns, and given out by the clarinets with an original and piquant accompaniment in the violas as follows:

The first portion of the Allegro is very concise, and contains little more than the statement of the two themes just quoted. On the other hand, the development of them, after the double bar, is both long and elaborate. In the course of it other phrases are introduced and make themselves prominent. Among these are the two following:

used as an accompaniment to the principal subject and:

in which the sforzandos at the beginning and end of the phrase give it great life and character.

The phrase already alluded to as forming the climax of the movement, in the Coda, shortly before its termination, is as follows:

Its effect is all the more striking from its succeeding a broken pissicato passage, and from its being played first, as above, with the strings only, soft, with delicate crescendos and nuances, and then repeated by the full orchestra. The impassioned point in this climax will remind many hearers of that to Schumann's favourite song, 'Widmung.' The whole passage forms a truly beautiful and affecting close to the movement.

III. The slow movement (Larghetto) is one long strain of adoring passion, obviously addressed to the wife whom Schumann had so recently won. The following is the melody, which, after being played by the violins, is repeated by the violoncellos, and finally by the oboes and horns, with accompaniments ingeniously varied, and increasing in elaborateness at each repetition:

IV. The Scherzo, molto vivace, might almost be called a Minuet:

The theme will be heard charmingly anticipated in the trombones a few bars before the close of the slow movement. Though, perhaps, rather heavier than the rest of the Symphony, the Scherzo is admirably relieved by the two Trios, in different rhythms, which are both characteristic and highly interesting:

and the movement closes with a diminuendo passage of irresistible originality and charm.

V. Nor is the Finale, Allegro animato e grazioso, in any way inferior in spirit or interest to the movements which precede it. It opens with a scale-passage in syncopated rhythm:

with all the force of the orchestra, a passage of which much use is made as the movement progresses, both in its original form and a modified shape (preserving the rhythm, and the irregular sforzando):

It becomes the groundwork of the fine sequence for the trombones mentioned at the outset of these remarks:

a truly solemn and impressive passage, which might not unfitly be labelled:

Dies iræ, dies illa:
Solvet sæclum in favillå.

[That day of wrath, that dreadful day,
When heaven and earth shall pass away.]

Meantime the theme:

with which the movement starts, after the five bars of introduction just quoted (No. 12), is as bright and gay as anything can be.

A pleasant episode in the story of this movement is formed by a kind of conversation between the following crisp and fresh motif:

which might almost have been suggested by the Canzonetta in Mendelssohn's early String Quartet*immediately followed by the scale-passage already quoted:

a phrase as thorough Schumann as the other is Mendelssohn—in which the lively intruder is elbowed out by its more earnest brother in a very amusing and A brilliant though somewhat personal fashion. strident Coda concludes at once the movement and the work.

The two following references to the Symphony from Julius Eckardt's 'Ferdinand David und die Familie Mendelssohn-Bartholdy' (Leipzig, 1888), are amusing and interesting.

I. Part of a letter from David to Mendelssohn, dated Leipzig, August 4, 1841: 'Schumann came to me yesterday, and remained without speaking for a whole hour; from which at last I gathered that he would not be unwilling to hear his Symphony once more in public. I hinted that it would be well for him to hear the horns rehearse; on which he made it clear, by signs, that he would willingly pay for a rehearsal to make the work go thoroughly well. After this he smoked two cigars, rubbed his mouth twice, as if to prevent a single syllable from coming out, took his hat, forgot his glove, nodded his head, tried the false door, and at last got away through the right one.'

'Ich bin so lang nicht bey dir gewest.'
[So long I've been away from you.]
It is used by Sebastian Bach in his 'Peasant Cantata,' and in the Quodlibet' which closes his 'Thirty Variations.'

II. A letter from Schumann, evidently the sequel of the visit:

'DEAR DAVID,

'Here is the Symphony; I confide the performance of it to you with the greatest confidence. If I could see you at the first desk, and Mendelssohn conducting, it would make me very happy. But his return is, as I hear, very uncertain, on account of the new Symphonysoirées in Berlin. And then he was so very good about conducting the first performance of it, that it would be rather presuming on his kindness to ask him to study the work again.

'I suppose it would be impossible for you to conduct and lead at the same time? That really would be the best. The orchestra know the work already, and would soon find their way about it. And you would take care not to put anything else too large or too difficult in the programme, so that there would be plenty of time for rehearing? All this I may leave to you.

There are some places in the Symphony about which I should like to talk to you, especially one in the first movement. The figure in the horns:

never comes out enough, when I hear the work. At the first performance it seemed to me sufficiently loud, and therefore I printed it so. I think I should like the trombones to have it—as I first sketched it; at any rate we will try it once with them.'

[A more extended quotation from Schumann's letter of October 22, 1845, than that given on page 385, may be furnished from 'The Letters of Robert Schumann' (John Murray, 1907). This letter, written from Dresden, begins:

'Dear Mendelssohn,

You must now be well in the middle of my Symphony. Do you still remember the first rehearsal of it in the year 1841—and the 'stopped' trumpets and horns at the beginning? It sounded as if the orchestra had a cold in its head; I can't help laughing when I think of it. And now let me thank you for again thinking about my piece and again taking trouble over it. It is with the greatest pleasure that I think of that first evening's performance. How beautifully it went, better than I have ever heard it since !'-ED. M. T.]

Reviews.

Tchaikovsky: his life and works. By Rosa Newmarch. Edited by Edwin Evans, Senr.

[William Reeves.]

The biographical section of this book (pp. 1-225) is not new, as it is an exact reprint of a volume published in 1900, the misprints (including the wrong date of Tchaikovsky's birth) being repeated! Since then Mrs. Newmarch has issued her exhaustive 'Life' of the composer which supersedes all that has been written, in the English language, on the career of the eminent Russian musician. The volume under notice professes to give Mrs. Newmarch's 'Preface to the original edition,' but one important paragraph is omitted therefrom. It reads: 'No one can be more conscious than myself of its [the book's] shortcomings, and of the patchy nature of its construction. If it has not been altogether a case of making bricks without straw, at least

Op. 12. This (in the major) is a very old German tune to the words the straw has been scattered on the four winds of journalism, and has had to be gathered up in the by-ways of Russian musical literature.'

We may therefore leave the biographical portion of the book as a tale that was told from scanty material eight years ago, and pass on to the supplementary matter (226 pages) contributed by Mr. Edwin Evans, Senr. This addendum consists of six chapters devoted to 'The relation of Tchaikovsky to art-questions of the day,' four chapters containing 'Analyses of selected works,' and 'Indices for student use.' Mr. Evans's elaborate dissertations have already appeared in the columns of the Musical Standard, but those who have a penchant for such things will be glad to peruse these critical opinions in a collected form.

Melodious Technique for the Pianoforte. Books I. and II. By J. A. O'Neill.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

The inferiority, in strength and agility, of the fourth and fifth fingers of the hand (counting the thumb as a finger) is all too well known to students of the pianoforte. As Miss O'Neill says: 'It is obvious that additional and special training is needed for these two defective fingers.' Material for this strength-acquiring requisite the author seeks to supply in the twelve studies which constitute these two books of pianoforte technique. They consist of exercises for each hand, on repetitions, triplets, intervals of thirds, shakes, and for turning over the second and fourth fingers, with or without holding down the thumb. While the main purport of the books has been steadily kept in view, the author has relieved the dreary monotony so often attending such things by making these studies melodically attractive—in a word, they are musical as well as technical. No better tribute to their excellence can be furnished than the testimony of M. Vladimir de Pachmann, who says: 'I cordially recommend these original Studies . . . I consider them quite superior to any other exercises of the kind . . . I was much struck by their originality, both in conception and in the clever manner in which the idea is carried out!' Need anything more be said?

Six songs, with German and English words; Unexpected Joy; When songs have passed away. Music by Maude Valérie White.

[Chappell & Co., Ltd.]

To take up a song by Miss Maude V. White, is to be sure to find it well written, whatever part inspiration may play in the composition. This highly necessary but vague quantity is present in very varying degree in the above volume of six songs. The first, entitled 'The star,' is a setting of a poem by Heine with an English translation by Adrian Ross, and proves one of the best of the series, the voice part reflecting the emotional sentiment of the text and the pianoforte accompaniment being interesting. 'Among the roses' is less satisfactory. The words, translated by the composer from the German of Hoffmann von Fallersleben, seem to have been written after the music, and it is scarcely fair to ask a vocalist to finish a song on the top G, with the word 'stillt'; and though, as usual, the English word given, 'Spring,' is more vocal, to sustain it for nine bars certainly suggests a long and trying season. The next song, entitled 'Divine Providence,' is Italian in style and musically is attractive owing to the independence of the pianoforte part. The strongest number of the series is 'The earth will wake from wint'ry sleep,' the text by E. Geibel, with an English translation by Adrian Ross. This song calls for a dramatic singer, by whom it could be made very effective. Its conclusion is broad and dignified, the optimistic spirit of the words being exhilarating. 'A child's evening prayer' is a simple and unaffected ditty, and the concluding song, 'Spring has come,' has much the character of a German folk-song.

'Unexpected Joy' shows Miss Maude V. White's talent at its best. The tender amorousness of the text, by Roger Gay, taken from the Persian of Haviz, finds a sympathetic echo in the nusic which is graceful and expressive. 'When songs have passed away,' words by Ellis Walton, if less distinctive, may be recommended to vocalists of limited resources.

PART-SONGS FOR MALE VOICES.

Where lies the land? By Roland Rogers.

My heart is sair. By H. Elliot Button.

The hen and the carp. By Willy von Moellendorff.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

The part-song 'Where lies the land,' by the organist of Bangor Cathedral, is a setting of a poem by Arthur Hugh Clough, which admirably lends itself to musical treatment. The idea of comparing life to a ship on its voyage is scarcely new, but the treatment in this instance is full of poetic suggestiveness, and the contrast between calm and storm, combined with the opening question 'Where lies the land to which the ship would go?' has been taken good advantage of by the composer, whose little work is remarkable for variety and musical interest. Laid out for first and second tenors, and first and second basses, the music demands crisp attack, but careful rehearsal will be well repaid by the effects produced.

The melody, so very Scotch in character, of 'My heart is sair,' has been arranged in four parts by Mr. Elliot Button with due regard to the diatonic nature of the tune, and the setting should find much favour.

'The hen and the carp' belongs to what may be called the humours of the countryside. In this instance a carp, described as 'without a sorrow or a care,' reproves a hen for cackling so persistently over the proof of her industry, and a considerable portion of the part-song is devoted to the persistent demonstrations of her maternal pride. The music shows a lively sense of humour and, provided that a body of basses can be found to repeat the word 'cluck' eighty times allegro vivace without getting the 'k' mixed up with the 'l,' the part-song would certainly provide entertainment; in any case it will prove an excellent exercise for 'the unruly member.'

Six Sacred Songs for Soprano.

Six Sacred Songs for Contralto. Six Sacred Songs for Tenor.

Six Sacred Songs for Bass.

Sets I. and II. Edited by Alberto Randegger.
[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Whoever originated the publication of these eight books must be credited with a happy thought; therein will be found excellent vocal material suitable for organ recitals and sacred concerts, and, of course, for the home circle. Among the older composers represented in the selection are Bach, Handel, Haydn, Beethoven and Schubert, while the moderns are sampled by two beautiful compositions—'All my heart, inflamed and burning' (Inflammatus), from Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater,' and 'Thou, O Lord, art my Protector,' a charming soprano air by Dr. Saint-Saëns, which can be sung with a violoncello obbligato. Mr. Randegger has added breathmarks and expression indications whereby the selections become valuable for teaching purposes. As each book, containing six beautifully engraved songs, is sold at two shillings, the cost per song works out at the modest sum of—fourpence!

Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in G. By Ernest Newton.
[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

The setting of the evening Canticles by Mr. Ernest Newton is for the usual four voices. Being of unpretentious character, it will meet the requirements of the majority of church choirs. The music, which presents no reading difficulty, is richly harmonized.

THE EMPIRE CONCERT.

The Empire Concert held at the Royal Albert Hall on May 23 was a living witness in music, like that given in Queen's Hall last year, to the spirit bent upon honouring Empire Day. At the same time it exemplified in no unmistakable manner the standard which Empire artists throughout Great Britain's dominions have set up for reciprocity in music within the Empire. This 'getting together' is what our overseas-dominions are bent upon that cohesion which is to make for all time to come the stronghold-sure among our loved children of the dominions. Those kinsfolk, if properly nourished, will in a very few years hence prove a tower of strength to the British Empire, and become 'mightier yet' as in the song sung on this occasion with such wonderful effect. The influence of music, born of 'the power of sound,' is being exemplified in the coming pilgrimage from the old country to the new world of a British choir from Sheffield, setting sail for Canada to clasp the hand of their musical kinsfolk afar off, and yet not afar off. And there should be recalled the Canadian Festivals, devoted to the works of British composers, given a few years ago under Sir Alexander Mackenzie's direction, followed by similar festivals in South Africa under the direction of Dr. Dowling. The fruition of this movement, as in all world-movements, must necessarily have for its objective the concentration at one time or another of their working influences-not merely as offshoots to, but as needed factors in the quickening of the spirit-right here in the heart's core of the Empire, as witnessed on this Empire Day.

The huge and enthusiastic audience which crowded the great building at South Kensington must have been very gratifying to Dr. Charles Harriss, of Ottawa, who gratuitously spent much time and trouble in organizing this Empire concert. The first part of the programme included four novelties as regards London. Of these the first was a melodious and sprightly 'Birthday overture' by Mr. Landon Ronald, conducted by the composer. Sir Alexander Mackenzie took charge of the baton when his rousing 'Empire Song' was performed by choir and orchestra. Dr. Charles Harriss was accorded a very hearty reception when he came forward to conduct his choral setting, with orchestral accompaniment, of Kingsley's pathetic poem 'The Sands of Dee,' to which the Canadian musician has wedded appropriate and effective music.

Special interest was excited in the first performance of a 'Marching song for soldiers,' entitled 'Follow the colours.' In this connection it may be recalled that the Worshipful Company of Musicians offered a prize for the words of a military song to which our troops could sing while on the march, with the result that the award was given to Captain W. de Courcy Stretton for his poem beginning 'Thousands, thousands of marching feet.' These verses have been set to martial music by Sir Edward Elgar—music which perfectly harmonizes with the pomp and circumstance attending military movements. The 'Marching song,' vigorously sung by tenors and basses of the Royal Choral Society and conducted by Sir Alexander Mackenzie, received the heartiest applause of the great audience.

The concert opened with the National Anthem. Mr.

The concert opened with the National Anthem. Mr. Ben Davies sang Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Onaway! Awake, beloved' (from the 'Song of Hiawatha'), and Braham's 'The death of Nelson,' while Sir Charles Santley was vociferously cheered after he had sung his own song 'Son of the Ocean Isle' and Boyce's 'Heart of Oak.' The rich tones of Madame Ada Crossley's voice were heard to advantage in 'Land of hope and glory,' with chorus (Elgar) and 'There's a Land' (Allitsen). A song composed specially for the occasion by Mr. Liddle, entitled 'Song of the sons oversea,' was sung by Miss Ada Forrest, and Miss Irene Strauss sang Bemberg's 'Chant Hindou.' In the regrettable absence, through hoarseness, of Madame Albani, her place was ably filled by Miss Alys Bateman in the solo part of Bridge's 'Flag of England,' and she also sang the solo in Arme's 'Rule, Britannia,' with which the concert closed. The only orchestral piece in the second part of the programme was Mr. Edward German's 'Welsh Rhapsody' (conducted by the composer), a worthy representative of Principality music in tunes cleverly treated. By her admirably played violin solos Miss Kathleen Parlow gave the greatest satisfaction.

It only remains to state that the London Symphony Orchestra and the Royal Choral Society rendered most efficient aid, as did Mr. H. L. Balfour and Mr. Stanley Hawley at the organ and pianoforte respectively. The four conductors already mentioned represented England, Scotland, and Canada, while the performers included natives of England, Wales, Ireland, India, Australia, and South Africa—thus practically the whole of the Empire furnished proof of its artistic excellence in this most successful music-making.

THE OPERA.

In the prospectus of this summer's grand opera season at Covent Garden, a feature was made of two series termed 'Wagner Festival performances,' representations which will probably form the most memorable evenings. The works chosen were 'Die Walküre,' and 'Götterdämmerung' (the first time that the latter has been given apart from the 'Ring'), 'Tristan und Isolde' and 'Die Meistersinger,' given respectively on May 1, 5, 16 and 20, and the second series following on May 9, 13, 22 and 25. In the excerpts from the 'Ring' the part of Brünnhilde was embodied by Madame Gulbranson, whose reading was more remarkable for completeness of detail and fulfilment of tradition than for sympathetic charm. Siegmund and Siegfried were personated by Mr. Cornelius, who made excellent use of his vocal means and realised the requirements of these characters. Madame Kirkby Lunn sang splendidly as Fricka and Waltraute; a new-comer, Madame Rüsche-Endorf, made a most favourable impression by her impersonation of Sieglinde; the parts of Wotan and Hunding were finely served respectively by Mr. Van Rooy and Mr. Knüpfer, and greater distinction than usual was imparted to the character of Gunther by Mr. C. Whitehill. Madame Egli was admirable as Gutrune, and in minor parts a group of English artists, consisting of Mesdames Caroline Hatchard, Florence Whickham, Lenora Sparkes, Edna Thornton, Phyllis Archibald and Dilys Jones, were most successful as Walküres.

The most notable performance was that of 'Tristan,' in great measure owing to the superb impersonation of Isolda by Miss Edyth Walker, an American artist who sang at Covent Garden in the grand season of 1900, but as a contralto. No prima donna since Madame Ternina was last with us has given us a reading so distinguished by intense womanliness in the best sense of the term. Miss Walker was supported by a splendid company, which consisted of Madame Kirkby Lunn and Messrs. Knote, Knupfer, Van Rooy, Hendrix and Nietan.

The performance of 'Die Meistersinger,' on May 20, had a superlative feature in the Hans Sachs of Mr. Van Rooy, an embodiment the acme of philosophical humanity. He was capably supported by Madame Osborne-Hannah as Eva, Mr. Jörn as Walther, Miss Wickham as Magdalene, and by Messrs. Knüpfer, Geis and Henke, who respectively personated Pogner, Beckmesser and David.

In addition to the above performances a notable rendering was secured of 'Tannhäuser' on May 7, when Miss Borghild Bryhn gave one of the most satisfactory impersonations of Venus that have been seen at Covent Garden, and Madame Rüsche-Endorf sang with great charm in the part of Elisabeth. The orchestral playing in all the above works, under the direction of Dr. Hans Richter, was a constant source of keen enjoyment.

What may be termed the lighter side of the season has consisted of performances in Italian. Madame Tetrazzini reappeared on the opening night (April 30) in 'Traviata,' and subsequently sang in 'Lucia di Lammermoor' on May 2 and 'Rigoletto' on May 14. On each occasion she fascinated a large audience by the exquisite finish of her singing. A new tenor, Mr. Marak, made his début here as Alfredo on the first night of the season, and subsequently was heard as Canio in 'Pagliacci' and Turiddu in 'Cavalleria Rusticana.' He has a pleasing voice and a refined style. Mr. Sammarco has sung very finely and shown great dramatic instinct in the above-mentioned Italian opera, and other artists who have assisted are Miss Fely Dereyne (who reappeared as Nedda in 'Pagliacci' on May 4), Messrs. John McCormack, Robert Radford, Grabbé, Malfatte and Zucchi. The Italian operas have been ably conducted by Signor Campanini.

Madame Melba made her first appearance this season on May 19—her birthday, by the way—and was most cordially received by a large audience. The opera chosen was 'La Bohèmé,' in which she sang as Mimi with a beauty of vocal tone that made it difficult to believe that the evening was the commencement of her twenty-first season at Covent Garden. Concerning the other characters, a most vivacious rendering was given of Musetta by Miss Fely Dereyne, and the four light-hearted students were impersonated with great spirit by Messrs. Zenatello, Scotti, Marcoux and Gilibert. Signor Campanini secured an excellent ensemble, and a new scene for the second act contributed to the general effectiveness of the performance.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.

The new concert hall named after the historical but now defunct building in Regent Street and Piccadilly, was opened to the public on Saturday, April 25, with a series of promenade concerts given nightly under the direction of Mr. Lyell Tayler. Standing on the site formerly occupied by St. Paul's Church in Great Portland Street, the space is somewhat limited, but by means of a roomy balcony an audience of about 1,100 people can be seated, while the platform, with its rising tiers of seats, can accommodate an orchestra and chorus of about sixty performers.

The proceedings on the opening night were very simple. Miss Constance Collier recited an ode written for the occasion by Héléne Gingold, after which Madame Lucile Hill, supported by the band consisting of members of the Queen's Hall Orchestra, sang the National Anthem. The concert proper commenced with the overture to 'Tannhauser,' the other orchestral works being Liszt's 'Hungarian' Rhapsody No. 3, the first concert performance in London of the first Entr'acte from Coleridge-Taylor's 'Nero' suite, the overture to 'William Tell,' Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' suite No. 1, the Scherzo from Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer Night's Dream' music, and 'A Pizzicato caprice' for strings, composed by the English violinist Mr. William Henley. The soloists were Miss Lucile Hill, Mr. Watkin Mills, and Mr. Zacharewitsch, the last named giving a neat rendering of the solo part of Mendelssohn's Violin concerto. Mr. Lyell Tayler conducted with alertness and emphasis that secured admirable results, and continued his good offices until May 23, when the first series of these concerts concluded.

Several novelties have been introduced, amongst which may be mentioned, on April 28, a suite entitled 'Ramayana,' by Bertram Shapleigh, a work consisting of five movements illustrating episodes from the great Sanskrit epic that gives the title to the work. On April 30 was given the first performance of a 'Dance of the Sun feast,' by Henry Waller, which proved more grotesque than pleasing. A prelude to 'Paolo and Francesca,' by Edith Swepstone, performed for the first time in London on May 1, is an imaginative and pleasing composition inspired by Mr. Stephen Phillips's dramatic treatment of the immortal Italian tragedy. On May 5 was produced a clever fantasia by Mr. Henry Coates, entitled 'In June,' and on May 13 a Pianoforte concerto by Mr. Algernon Lindo was heard for the first time in London.

EVENING CONTINUATION SCHOOLS' CHORAL UNIONS.

The North-West London Union gave a most successful concert at the Northern Polytechnic on May 2. A choir of 300 adult performers gathered from thirteen schools performed 'The Banner of St. George' (Elgar) and 'The Inchcape Rock' (Bridge). Mr. H. P. Dakin was the conductor, and Mr. T. D. Knight and Mr. G. T. Pinches accompanied on the pianoforte and organ respectively. A miscellaneous selection also served to show how well the choir had been trained.

The South-East London Union enjoyed extraordinary success on the occasion of their concert given at the Great Central Hall, Tower Bridge, on May 9. The programme was phenomenally long, but it proved constantly interesting to the great audience assembled. The chief works were 'The gate of Life' (Leoni), and a portion of 'Elijah' (Mendelssohn). Mr. Arthur G. Gibbs proved himself to be an efficient conductor of large choral and orchestral resources. Mr. Oliver King conducted his own effective settings of 'The sands of Dee' and 'The three fishers.'

The 650 singers of the West London Choral Union gave their fifth annual concert at Queen's Hall on May 21, conducted by Mr. W. T. Oke. Many of the choruses in Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul,' which was the chief work presented, were sung with great breadth and dramatic emphasis; but the balance of tone was somewhat spoiled by the small proportion of male voices and by the fact that accommodation had to be found in the auditorium for all the soprano singers. An orchestra of eighty performers supplied the accompaniments. The soloists were Madame Isabel George, Miss May Head, Mr. Alfred Heather and Mr. Harry Dearth. The concert concluded with Bridge's 'The Ballad of the Clampherdown.'

MIDDLESBROUGH MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Middlesbrough possesses more than its share of smoke and grime, and perhaps for that very reason it has cultivated musical art to an extent that very few towns of anything like the same size can claim to rival. Five years ago a festival was established, and attended by so much success that its future became practically assured. The second festival, of what it is hoped will continue to form a quinquennial series, was opened in the Town Hall on the evening of Tuesday, April 28, and in several respects marked an advance upon its precursor. This time four concerts were arranged, as compared with three in 1903, and the gathering was extended so as to occupy three days instead of two. The choir was larger than before by nearly a hundred voices. There was, too, a stronger programme, so that Middlesbrough has reasonable ground for regarding its festival as an advancing cause.

At the opening concert it was interesting to hear Parry's 'Lotos eaters.' Even if the work may not be Parry at his best, it at least enabled the members of the choir to show what they could do in the way of refinement and expressive nuance, and the only disappointment experienced was that the composer himself was prevented by indisposition from being present. Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens' was also sung and the audience enjoyed the opportunity of hearing the 'Spring Chorus' from Hugo Wolf's unfinished opera, 'Manuel Vanegas,' which should receive attention from those on the look out for something more or less representative of one whose name is so much 'in the air' at the present time. Good renderings of Dvorák's Symphony in G and Smetana's tone-picture 'From Bohemian forests and fields' were secured from the Hallé Orchestra, who officiated throughout the festival. Mr. Plunket Greene contributed several songs in characteristic style, and Miss Agnes Nicholls showed her vocal ability in 'Ah! fors è lui.'

The Wednesday morning concert brought with it Elgar's oratorio 'The Kingdom,' which imposed a sufficiently severe test upon all concerned. There were times when the spirit and subtle religious atmosphere of the work appeared somewhat to escape and give place to a rather bald statement of fact; but in the main the rendering furnished proof of intelligence well applied, together with a command of tonal power worthy of the leading choirs of the west. The principals were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Herbert Brown, none of whom did better than the young Yorkshire baritone. Two short movements, a Musette and Elegie from Sibelius's incidental music to King Christian II., were in the nature of novelty and exerted an appreciable charm, compact of northern idealism and a consciously primitive colouring. Madame Kirkby Lunn sang Berlioz's 'La Captive,' and the concert closed with a rendering of Brahms's Symphony in E minor that formed perhaps the least satisfactory feature of the festival.

The evening programme was much too long, and the chief novelty in Mr. Bertram Shapleigh's setting of Edgar Allan Poe's lines to 'The Raven' was not essayed until close upon ten o'clock, and was performed before a diminishing audience, growing momentarily more anxious about trams and trains. Mr. Shapleigh, a composer of American birth, has been for several years resident in this country, where his songs are becoming deservedly popular. He has closely followed the course of Poe's poem, and shows us the Raven as a fearsome fowl in a mystic atmosphere conjured up by comparatively simple yet effective means. There is plenty of 'tapping,' not to say croaking, but it is not overdone. The composer writes gratefully and melodiously for the voices, and imposes no great task upon his orchestra. The rendering placed the work in a very favourable light.

A novelty, that was no less a novelty because it was far from new, was Carissimi's oratorio 'Jephthah,' the revival of which aroused more interest than that pertaining to a mere historical curiosity. Combined with a certain intelligible naïveté of expression, the music revealed a striking feeling for declamation and poignant expression, and the 'echo' effects in Filia's (the daughter's) song, 'Lament, ye valleys,' by which the cadences of each section are prolonged, made a strong appeal to the imagination. Carissimi's orchestral accompaniment being now impracticable, Mr. Kilburn, the conductor, had discreetly supplied what was necessary in this direction. Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Herbert Brown were the principals. The rest of the lengthy programme included an orchestral prelude from Bach's cantata 'Der Himmel lacht,' a satirically-humorous scene from the same composer's 'Phœbus and Pan,' a couple of songs, and a selection—actually no more than a selection!—from 'Elijah.'

The final concert of the series was largely instrumental, and embraced admirable performances of Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte concerto in B flat minor by Miss Fanny Davies and of Beethoven's Violin concerto by Miss Vivien Chartres. Mr. John Coates sang the 'Prize song' from 'Die Meistersinger.' The only novelty was Krug-Waldsee's cantata 'The buried city,' which, like Mr. Shapleigh's work, came last upon the programme. Its theme is the vitality of song that persists though empires perish. Of somewhat conventional pattern, the cantata none the less revealed evidence of genuine musical impulse, and its rendering with Mr. John Coates as soloist served to close a successful festival in fitting style. It may well be said that the prime-mover in the gathering was Mr. Kilburn, the conductor, whose stimulating influence manifested itself in many ways.

London Concerts.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

An attractive programme was offered at the concert given on May 14, at which Mr. Arthur Nikisch made his first appearance as conductor of the Society's concerts:

Symphony in C major		• •	• •	s	chumann.
Song	" Mignor	"מ	• •		Liszt.
Fräulein ELENA GERHARDT.
Waldweben ('Siegfried')	••				Wagner.
Violin Concerto	• •			Tcl	laikovsky.
Herr Efrem Zimbalist.
Symphonic-poem—'Les I	Prélud es "	••	••		Liszt.

Schumann's symphony, which deserves to be heard more often than it is, was performed with great emotional intensity, and the proper 'atmosphere' was imparted to the 'Siegfried' music. Herr Zimbalist played Tchaikovsky's concerto with special significance, and extracted a real musical meaning from the most meaningless bravura passages. Fräulein Gerhardt gave, besides Liszt's 'Mignon,' songs by Hugo Wolf and Richard Strauss, accompanied at the pianoforte by Mr. Nikisch, and roused the enthusiasm of the audience by her fine lieder singing. Liszt's most inspired symphonic poem formed an effective conclusion to the concert, which took place, as usual, at Queen's Hall.

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

At the concert given at Queen's Hall on April 25, by a cont Mr. Arthur Nikisch conducted. A memorable interpretation, the finest we have ever heard, was given of the Leonora' overture No. 3, while Brahms's third Symphony impression.

was impressively interpreted. Glowing performances were also given of the Prelude and Liebestod ('Tristan and Isolde'), and Tchaikovsky's exciting symphonic fantasia 'Francesca da Rimini.'

At the concert given on May 2 an interesting novelty was introduced in the Prelude to Act II. of Miss Ethel M. Smyth's 'The Wreckers,' an opera which has been produced at Leipzig on the advice of Mr. Nikisch. As a concert performance of a large portion of the opera has been arranged, it will be better to defer criticism. Weber's 'Der Freischütz' overture and Haydn's Symphony in B flat from the Salomon set, were also in the programme, which concluded with Tchaikovsky's E minor Symphony. As Mr. Nikisch was the conductor, there is no need to add that a stirring performance was given of this work.

At the last concert of the series, on May 9, the principal feature was Brahms's first Symphony, in the interpretation of which Mr. Nikisch was at his best, even a few individualities in the matter of tempt in the first movement not detracting from the general effect of brilliance and vigour. The distinguished conductor showed in Berlioz's 'Carnaval Romain' overture the extraordinary power with which he can work up and sustain a climax. Beethoven's G major Pianoforte concerto was played by Miss Irene Scharrer, a young pianist who is making her way to the front. The programme, which included no novelty, ended with Wagner's 'Flying Dutchman' overture.

LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY.

The first performance in London of Granville Bantock's 'Omar Khayyam,' produced at the last Birmingham Festival, was given by this Society at Queen's Hall on May 23. The work was fully described in these columns at the time of its production, and it is only necessary to say that the favourable impression created on that occasion was confirmed. If the performance did not realise to the full the composer's intentions, Mr. Arthur Fagge, who conducted, deserves every credit for his enterprise in giving Londoners an opportunity of hearing this interesting work, and for the evident care bestowed by him and the forces under his control in mastering its complexities. The solo vocalists were Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Harry Dearth.

VARIOUS ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS.

The Colet Orchestral Society gave a successful concert at Kensington Town Hall on May 6, when the programme included the 'Der Freyschütz' overture, Haydn's Symphony in G (letter V), and Cowen's 'Old English Dances' (Suite No. 2). In the interpretation of this selection the performers gave proof of the careful training they had received at the hands of Mr. W. Frye Parker, the able conductor of the Society. Sterndale Bennett's Pianoforte concerto in F minor was played by Mr. Septimus Webbe, and the vocalist was Miss Carmen Hill.

Mr. Mischa Elman, supported by the New Symphony Orchestra (conductor, Mr. Thomas Beecham), gave an orchestral concert at Queen's IIall on May 16, when he once more displayed his marvellous technique and soulful playing in the Violin concertos of Spohr (No. 9 in D minor) and Mendelssohn, in addition to Tartini's Sonata in G minor (Didone abbandonata), the last named being accompanied on the pianoforte by Mr. Waldemar Liachowsky. The orchestra played Mozart's 'Magic Flute' overture, Debussy's 'Petite Suite,' and the Fantasy for orchestra 'Over the hills and far away,' by Frederick Delius, a work which was first performed in England at the concert given by him on May 30, 1899.

Miss Vera French, a New Zealand violinist, supported by a contingent of the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Arthur Nikisch, gave her first concert at Eolian Hall on May 15, when she created a most favourable impression. Herr Ferencz Hegedüs gave a concert at Queen's IIall on May 20, in which he was supported by the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Arthur Nikisch. Tartini's Concerto in D minor, Mozart's in G minor (K. 216), and Max Bruch's in G minor presented an effective contrast in styles, and made demands upon the violinist's technical powers and range of expression to which Herr Hegedüs made adequate response. A striking performance of Elgar's 'Enigma' variations proved a pleasant feature of the afternoon's music.

Miss Marie Hall gave an orchestral concert at Queen's Hall on May 21, with the Queen's Hall Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood. On that occasion the fair young violinist again proved her ability to charm in refined renderings of two concertos, both in the key of D, by Brahms (Op. 77) and Paganini (Op. 6) respectively—two works of diametrically opposite character, which fully testified to Miss Hall's interpretative versatility. The programme included Beethoven's Coriolan overture and Granville Bantock's aria from 'Christ in the Wilderness,' sung by Mrs. Henry J. Wood.

A very pleasant evening was spent at Queen's Hall on May 12 with the Amateur Orchestra conducted by Mr. Wilhelm Sachse. A good account was given of the 'Die Meistersinger' overture and Mendelssohn's 'Scotch' Symphony, and sympathetic support rendered to Mr. Godowsky in Beethoven's Pianoforte concerto in G. The vocalist was Miss Susan Strong.

CHAMBER CONCERTS.

Mr. Joseph Holbrooke concluded his interesting series of Modern English Chamber concerts at Salle Erard on May 22, when the programme opened with Mr. Algernon Ashton's Pianoforte quartet in C (Op. 25), and concluded with the concert-giver's 'Byron' quartet for pianoforte and strings. The novelty of the afternoon's music was contributed by Mr. H. Waldo Warner in an excellent Trio for pianoforte and strings.

A concert was given at the Lyceum Club on May 22, exclusively of the works of Mr. Theodore Holland. A Sonata for violin and pianoforte in D major—excellently rendered by Mlle. du Chastain and Miss Evelyn Suart—is marked by distinction, the slow movement being of great beauty. The same qualities exist in the Variations on a Swedish air for pianoforte alone, beautifully played by Miss Evelyn Suart. A Romance, Ballade and Sérénade, the latter encored, are delicate and melodious pieces, which received full justice at the hands of Mlle. du Chastain. Herr Alexander Heinemann was the singer, and his fine voice and exquisite finish of style gave good expression to three fine songs which afforded full scope for great pathos and refined beauty of tone; the third song he was forced to repeat. Madame Lina Coen accompanied.

PIANOFORTE RECITALS.

These have been numerous, but distinction can only be said to have been achieved by Mr. Godowsky at Bechstein Hall on April 25 and May 2, and by Mr. Mark Hambourg at the Albert Hall on May 9. The former artist has never played so finely in London. His readings were remarkable not only for superb technique, but for intellectual acumen and artistic restraint. Mr. Hambourg also played with less indulgence in exaggeration than previously, and with proportionately impressive results.

VIOLIN RECITALS.

Miss Kathleen Parlow made a most successful reappearance at her violin recital, Queen's Hall, on April 28, when she again proved herself a young artist of exceptional promise.

again proved herself a young artist of exceptional promise.

The most important of the violin recitals were the three given by Messrs. Ysaye and Pugno at Queen's Hall on May 11, 18 and 25. Each programme consisted of three well-contrasted sonatas by different composers, and their interpretations were little short of ideal, so brilliantly and significantly was the music rendered; moreover the perfect unanimity of the players was a delightful feature of the performances. It is rare that such enthusiasm is aroused as was witnessed at the second recital.

VOCAL RECITALS.

Among the large number of recent vocal recitals, the most distinctive from their novelty were those given with lute accompaniment at Bechstein Hall by Miss Bokken Lasson on April 29, and Mr. Sven Scholander on May 16. Both these artists played on the old Swedish lute of the 17th century, and with very pleasing results. In each case the programme largely consisted of Swedish folk-songs ranging in sentiment from grave to gay, and many of them were delightfully naive in character.

Most pleasure-giving, also, have been the four vocal recitals at Bechstein Hall carried out on April 28 and May 5, 12 and 19 by Miss Elena Gerhardt and Mr. Arthur Nikisch. The lady vocalist wisely sings in her own language only, and chooses her songs from the best her countrymen have produced. The finish of her singing is no less remarkable than her versatility, and with Mr. Nikisch at the pianoforte one must go back to the days of Mr. and Mrs. Henschel's recitals for a series of equal artistic interest.

Mr. Robin Overleigh gave evidence of his excellent baritone voice at his song-recital at Bechstein Hall on May 13, when he interpreted an interesting selection of English, French, and German songs. Mr. York Bowen played some of his own pianoforte compositions, and Miss Marguerite Swale accompanied.

Two splendid recitals of German lieder took place at Bechstein Hall respectively on May 1 and 8, the vocalist being Mr. Ludwig Wüllner; and another fine baritone singer, new to London, Mr. Alexander Heinemann, gave recitals on May 8 and 18 at £olian Hall. At the same hall, on May 5, Miss Maja Kjöhler, associated with Miss Muriel Davenport, sang a number of Swedish folk-songs and also some English traditional songs with great taste and insight into their character. On May 18, Mr. Ernest Sharpe commenced at Æolian Hall a series of vocal recitals with a selection from the 16th, 17th, and 18th centuries, chiefly consisting of British examples, all of which were sung with dramatic perfection and vocal ability. Mention is also due of Mr. Ernest Groom, a young baritone with a sympathetic voice and manly style, who sang at Æolian Hall on May 21.

The Comus Glee Club gave their ladies' concert at Caxton Hall on May 5. The programme consisted of part-songs and glees by Cooke, Bishop, Abt, Webbe, Spofforth and others, and included Hiles's 'Wreck of the Hesperus.' Songs were contributed by Messrs. Wilson Cairns, F. King, Arthur Withers and H. Cockrane. Mr. James Sarjeant conducted, and Messrs. Sydney Farrow and T. W. Lardner accompanied.

Suburban Concerts.

The programme of the Richmond Philharmonic Society on May 5 was as usual of an interesting character. It contained Bach's 'Brandenburg 'Concerto, Beethoven's Symphony in F (No. 8), the Choral Epilogue from Elgar's 'Caractacus,' two Hungarian Dances by Brahms, and Dr. Charles Harriss's choric idyll 'Pan.' The presence of the composer of the last-named work in England enabled the Society to invite his assistance, and the cantata had the advantage of being conducted by him with very satisfactory results. At its conclusion, the composer and performers were accorded an ovation. The soloists were Miss Oswyn Jones, Mr. Frederick Norcup and Mr. Stewart Gardner. The remainder of the programme was admirably carried out under the conductorship of Dr. C. E. Jolley, to whom, by the way, a handsome ivory and gold baton was presented at the final rehearsal in appreciation of his services.

The Lewisham Choral Society gave a performance of Parry's 'Judith' at the Blackheath Concert Hall on April 23, under the conductorship of Mr. Frank Idle. The choir sang with intelligence and expression. The soloists were

Miss Dorothy Cook-Smith, Miss Lucie Johnstone, Mr. William Maxwell and Mr. Harry Dearth. The orchestra, composed chiefly of professional players, led by Mr. George Wilby, contributed in no small degree to the success of the

The Staines Choral Society gave its second concert this season in the Town Hall on April 30, when Mozart's 'Twelfth Mass' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' formed the programme. The choir did excellent work, especially in the 'Hymn of Praise.' The solo vocalists were Miss Kate Cherry, Miss Annie McBride, Mr. Henry F. Coote and Mr. George Stubbs. The performance was conducted by Mr. James Brown.

The Kensington Park Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. H. Scott-Baker, gave a concert in St. Mark's Hall, Blenheim Crescent, on May 12. The programme included the march and chorus from 'Tannhäuser,' Elgar's 'The challenge of Thor,' Grieg's 'Landerkennung' and Mozart's Concerto for pianoforte and orchestra in A, the solo part being played by Mr. Scott-Baker. The solo vocalists were Miss Dora Morris and Mr. Hubert Baker, both of whom introduced songs by Mr. Scott-Baker.

The Beckenham Choral Society gave a concert in the Public Hall on May 5, when Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' was the chief feature of the programme, which also included Edward German's part-songs 'O peaceful night' and 'O lovely May.' Miss Florence Holderness, Miss Edith Nutter and Mr. Henry Beaumont were the solo vocalists, and Mr. George J. Hall conducted.

A performance of Parry's 'Pied Piper' was given in St. James' Parish Room, Blackheath, on May 12, under the conductorship of Mr. W. E. Wearden, who is to be congratulated upon a very spirited rendering of the cantata, both choir and orchestra (led by Mr. Edward O'Brien) exhibiting precision of attack and good tone. The part of the Pied Piper was well rendered by Mr. L. E. Dennis. The singing of Miss E. Croft was a special feature of the concert.

The East Finchley and Muswell Hill Musical Society gave excellent performances of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's departure' and Mendelssobn's 'The first Walpurgis night' at its concert in the New Lecture Hall, East Finchley, on April 30, under the able conductorship of Mr. George R. Ceiley. The choral singing was specially noticeable for its intelligence and expression, and received satisfactory support from a very capable orchestra, led by Mr. E. Meier. The solo vocalists were Miss Edith Evans, Madame Kate Bauer, Mr. Gwilym Richards and Mr. Montague Borwell, who successfully sustained their respective parts.

The prizes for the second Phantasie for strings competition, under the auspices of the Worshipful Company of Musicians, have been awarded as follows: 1st prize, Mr. Frank Bridge; 2nd prize, Mr. James Friskin; 3rd prize, Mr. John Ireland. Additional prizes have been awarded to Miss Alice Bredt-Kerne and Miss Susie Spain-Dunk, while six smaller supplementary prizes have been assigned for compositions of merit.

Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' and a Wagner selection will be performed at the Crystal Palace on Saturday, June 20, under Handel Festival conditions. The soloists will be Miss Agnes Nicholls, Madame Ada Crossley, Mr. Ben Davies, Mr. Charles Bennett and Mr. Watkin Mills. Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock will be at the organ and Dr. Frederick Cowen will conduct. The overture to 'Rienzi' and the 'Ride of the Valkyries' will be performed by an orchestra numbering 500 performers.

Musical Competition Festivals.

TONBRIDGE AND DISTRICT.

April 28 and 29.

In the number of entries and in the standard of the performances this festival has made great headway since its inauguration seven years ago. In the senior competitions, West Malling were successful in the male-voice class and in the class for singing church music, and West Malling Church Choir were winners in the anthem-singing competition and the sight-reading contest. Chevening Choral Society were awarded the challenge shield in the chief choral class, and Wateringbury Choir secured the Lady Mary Lygon bowl for sight-reading. Dr. Henry Coward was the adjudicator. In the course of the concluding concert, given at Tonbridge School, the prizes were distributed by Countess Stanhope.

Westmorland (Kendal). April 29 and 30, May I and 2.

This festival has for some years made the performances by the combined resources of the district a leading feature, and the event may now be ranked in importance with festivals of the ordinary non-competitive type. Mr. Henry J. Wood brings his Queen's Hall Orchestra, and the programmes of the concerts include important works both instrumental and choral.

The chief work performed on this occasion was Brahms's 'German' Requiem. As the resources available were adequate to the demands of this great composition, a very impressive interpretation was given. Other choral works performed were 'The Revenge' (Stanford), 'God in Nature' (Schubert), 'Recognition of land' (Grieg), 'Evening scene' and 'Spanish serenade' (Elgar), and twelve scene and Spanish serenade' (Elgar), and twelve madrigals and part-songs. The instrumental programme included Mendelssohn's Violin concerto and Handel's A major Sonata for violin and pianoforte, in which Lady Speyer was the violinist, the 'Peer Gynt' No. I Suite (Grieg), the 'Hungarian' Rhapsody in F (Liszt), and Beethoven's A major Symphony and the 'Tannhäuser' overture. The solo singers were Miss Maria Brame overture. The solo singers were Miss Marie Brema, Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Beatrice Wilson, Mr. Frederic Austin and Mr. Ben Davies. Master Toni Maarkoff also played violin solos. At the children's concert the chief piece was the cantata 'The luck of Edenhall' (Sydney H. Nicholson), which was conducted by Mrs. T. A. Argles.

The competitions are all close at this festival. The standard has therefore been created by the exertions of the local conductors. In view of the scattered population and the difficulties of locomotion in the lake district, especially during the winter months, it is a striking testimony to the stimulating and educative effect of the competitive principle that such excellent results have been attained by the local units in addition to the magnificent consummation of the combined performances.

On the children's day over 500 juveniles competed, and combined to perform. The competitions revealed a fair standard of execution and of skill in sight-singing. Two mornings were devoted to the adult competitions. chief results were as follows: Choral societies-Ist, Carnforth (Mr. Rathbone), nine entries; Village choral societies—1st, Yelland (Mr. Percy Smale), seven entries. Kendal Parish Church (Mr. Granger) was first in the following competitions: Female-voice choirs (18 entries); madrigal class; sightreading (16 entries); Male-voice choirs (9 entries).
Dr. H. Walford Davies was the adjudicator, Mr. Sydney

H. Nicholson assisted with the sight-reading, and Miss Wakefield, who established the festival, distributed the prizes.

UPPER WHARFEDALE, ILKLEY. April 30, May 1 and 2.

This festival is promoted with great energy and corre-This festival is promoted with great energy and corresponding success by a strong committee. Mr. A. Aikhe Crawshaw, of Ilkley, is one of the honorary secretaries, and he has special gifts in the way of designing and carrying out organizations. The entries were very numerous, and they occupied the adjudicator, Dr. McNaught, for a good many hours each day. The chief choral prize was won by the Bingley Co-operative Choir (Mr. Salter), who gave an exceptionally fine performance of Elgar's 'My love dwelt in a northern land.' The Nelson Arion Glee Union

BRIGG. May 4 and 5.

Dr. Arthur Somervell was the adjudicator in the junior, and Mr. T. Tertius Noble in the senior sections at this festival. The chief results were: Female-voice choirs—Test: 'The Shepherds' (Walford Davies)-Ist, Waddingham; 2nd, Saxby. In the choral-reading at sight, Ulceby won. 2nd, Saxby. In the choral-reading at sight, Occup wonderchurch choirs—Test: 'Therefore, we before Him bending' (De Pearsall)—Ist, Saxby; 2nd, Willoughton. Male-voice choirs—Test: 'A festal greeting' (Mendelssohn)—Ist, South Killingholme; 2nd, Crowle. Open choral competition—Test: 'Adieu, sweet Amarillis' (Wilbye)—Ist, Saxby; 2nd Illeaby: 2nd South Killingholme. The chief prize-2nd, Ulceby; 3rd, South Killingholme. The chief prizewinners and the combined choirs took part in the concluding evening concert, at which the Hon. Mrs. Sandars distributed the prizes.

York. May 5 and 6.

The entries this year were double those of last year. Two judges, Dr. H. Walford Davies and the Rev. H. Dams, were engaged. The chief results were as follows:

were engaged. The chief results were as follows:

Village Challenge Cup: 1, Bishopthorpe; 2, Harewood.

Challenge Cup (for groups of villages): 1, Monk Fryston, Harewood, and Ripley, 80 marks; 2, Sherburn and Wykeham, 75 marks.

Anthem: 1, Ripley.

Part-Song (large villages): 1, Harewood: 2, Wykeham.

Miss Mary Egerton and Mr. E. C. Brooksbank are the chief promoters of this very useful festival.

MID-SOMERSET. May 5, 6 and 7.

The seventh annual festival was held at Midsomer Norton. There was a large attendance, and the different contests evoked much enthusiasm. The adjudicators were Dr. H. Coward, Dr. Vaughan Williams, and Miss Lucy King (Bath). There was an increased number of entries in the children's choral competitions, five more choirs competing than last year. The prize-winners in the solo classes were: soprano, Miss Jeannette Turville (Wells); contralto, Miss Ivy Wheeler; tenor, Mr. George Gay; baritone, Mr. Stanley Tovey; bass, Mr. Mortimer Mellier (all of Midsomer Norton). Dr. Coward said that in the tenor competition they had touched the highest point in the solo singing.

In the choral competition open only to villages of under 600 inhabitants, Lullington Choral Society alone sang, but their efforts were highly spoken of by the adjudicator. Five choirs competed in the class for non-prize winners during the last two years, Clutton and District being first. In that open to all villages, single or combined, three choirs competed, Chewton Mendip taking the prize. The award in the male-voice choir competition went to Midsomer Norton Wesleyan Choir. At the concluding concert the united choirs sang Bach's 'God's time is the best,' under the direction of Dr. Coward, with Miss Catherine Aulsebrook and Mr. J. Campbell McInnes as soloists.

WEST SURREY, WEYBRIDGE. May 6 and 7.

This festival was again a gratifying success. The scheme is now a comprehensive one, solo-singing for adults having been added this year. The junior competitions attracted nearly 500 children. A banner for the school gaining the highest percentage of marks in two or more classes was won by St. Paul's Girls' School, Addlestone. On the second day Addlestone and Weybridge (combined) gained three first prizes, Byfleet was successful in another class, and Esher ladies in the female-voice choir class. Weybridge won the prize for village orchestras, and Miss Butler's party that for pianoforte trios, in which the test was Mendelssohn's day. Mrs D minor Trio. Dr. McNaught and Mr. John Ivimey this event.

adjudicated. At this festival a point is made of the concert given by the combined resources. Haydn's 'Spring' and Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens' were the works given this year. Miss Christian Egerton conducted. An excellent orchestra provided the accompaniments, and, under the direction of Mr. Joseph Ivimey, gave a refined performance of Elgar's-recently published suite, 'The wand of youth.' Mrs. Montgomery, Mr. T. Garratt and Mr. F. Harrison were the soloists.

PEOPLE'S PALACE, EAST LONDON.

May, 9, 14, 15 and 16.

Dr. McNaught, Dr. Somervell, Dr. Percy Buck and Mr. Charles Macpherson were the adjudicators at this new festival. The competitions were almost entirely choral and attracted a gratifying number of entries. Eighteen children's choirs were heard by Dr. McNaught in three classes. Thirteen mixed-voice, four male-voice and over twenty ladies' choirs came forward in the various choral sections, besides seventeen choirs from places of worship. The chief results were as follows:

Children's Choirs (Bands of Hope, &c.). 1, St. Paul's, Shadwell, Band of Hope.

Choirs from Cripple Homes (r entry). Shoreditch Cripple Children

Choirs Itolies Itolies (I chry). Soliteorical Cripple Children Choir.

Elementary Schools. 1, Portman Place, Mile End; bracketed 2, Smeed Road, Old Ford (Miss A. S. Hedly) and Old Montague Street, Whitechapel (Miss Elsie Cole).

Continuation Schools. 1 (Mixed Voices), Millwall E.C.S. (Mr. J. T. Holmes); (Female Voices), Monteith Road E.C.S. (Mr. G. Thornton). Vocal Quartet (Male): 1, Amen Court Guild. Vocal Quartet (Mixed): 1, Miss Day-Winter's quartet.

Ladies' Trios. 1, Miss Bagg's trio party.

Ladies' Choral Societies (Advanced). 1, Mr. Day-Winter's Ladies' Choir, Mile End; 2, Toynbee Hall Choral Class. Intermediate: 1, St. James' Young Women's Guild. Rateliff (Mrs. Knowles) Elementary: 1, Guild of St. Mary, Bow (Rev. H. J. Kitcat).

Choirs from places of worship (Men and Boys). 1, All Hallows', Barking-by-the-Tower; (Mixed Voices), Wesley's Chapel Choir, City (Mr. Charles Warner). The competitions for string orchestras and instrumental trios and quartets were in each case won by players from South Place.

The festival concluded with a grand evening concert, at which the principal prize-winners performed their test-pieces and all combined to sing the chorus 'Then round about the starry throne' from 'Samson,' under the baton of Sir Walter Parratt. Miss Hilda Foster contributed vocal solos. The prizes were distributed by Princess Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein. The success of this festival is mainly due to the activity and organizing capacity of the honorary secretary, Miss Edith Barran.

BRISTOL EISTEDDFOD. May 11 to 14.

At the sixth annual musical competitions held at the Victoria Rooms, there were 523 entries as against 365 last year, and prizes were offered to the value of £300 and upwards. The adjudicators were Dr. Horton Allison, Mr. T. B. Knott, Mr. Daniel Price, Mr. Lewis Hann, Mr. Harry Morgan and Mr. Ernest A. Dicks. The greatest interest was felt in the pianoforte playing for an upright grand pianoforte value £50, for which there were thirty-six entries, the winner being Winifred Newton, of Bristol, who last year was placed second in a similar competition. Bristol Harmonic Choir (Joseph Jenkins) in the male-voice choirs, and Fishponds School (Miss S. M. Hurley) in children's choirs, were prize-winners. In organ playing, G. A. Breent (Cheltenham) was first in the seniors, and William R. Mines in the juniors.

May 12, 13 and 14.

The entries here were so numerous that three days had to be devoted to the festival. Seventeen schools sent seventyone entries, and there were twenty-two solo singers. Eighteen one entries, and there were twenty-two solo singers. Eighteen adult choirs came on the village day, and many excellent choirs and quartets came on the open day. The chief choral prize was won by the Retford Amateur Musical Society. Mr. Harry Evans was the principal adjudicator, and Mr. William Woolley, of Nottingham, assisted on the children's day. Mrs. Peake, of Bawtry Hall, is the chief promoter of

WENSLEYDALE TOURNAMENT OF SONG.

May 13 and 14.

This was held at Bedale, Mr. T. Tertius Noble being the adjudicator. The principal results were as follows: Trio for female voices—Test: 'Fly, singing bird, fly' (Elgar). 1st prize, Bedale Musical Society; 2nd prize, Middleham. The test for the male-voice choirs was 'Give a rouse' (Granville Bantock), the winners being Bedale Male-voice Choir (1st prize), Mr. H. E. Brook's choir (2nd prize). In the anthem-singing (open class) competition—Test: 'Oh, that I knew' (Sterndale Bennett), Bedale Church Choir and Bedale Wesleyan Choir were respectively first and second. For Choral Societies (open class) the test was 'Weary wind of the west' (Elgar), the winners being Bedale Musical Society (first), Middleham Musical Society (second); and in the small Choral Societies' section—Test: 'Song of the pedlar' (Lee Williams)—Newton-le-Willows Choral Society and Hauxwell Church Choir respectively took first and second places. Certificates were handed to the successful competitors by Lady Beresford-Peirse, and the festival concluded at night with a concert, of which the principal features were performances of Brahms's 'Song of destiny' and Gade's Spring's message.

MORECAMBE.

May 13, 14, 15 and 16.

This great competitive festival still retains its hold of the Northern and Midland districts. It was computed that nearly 5,000 competitors took part on the present occasion, and the audiences were as large as ever before. The long and much regretted illness of the Rev. Canon Gorton had not entirely deprived the committee of his counsel, and all concerned in the event were gratified to find that he was able to attend the festival.

The first day was devoted to the children. There were sixty-six vocal soloists, fifty-two pianists and violinists, twenty-four children's choirs, six maypole parties, and five action-song parties. Several of Mr. Bates's boys came from London to compete in the open solo-singing section, and they stood high, Brian Williams taking the first prize. the challenge shield class for school choirs, the Keighley Utley Council School, under Mr. W. H. Whitaker, came first, after giving remarkably beautiful performances of the four test-pieces. In another section, the only one in which, owing to their constitution, they could compete, a boys' choir from Mr. Bates's London School for Choristers gained a first place. Dr. Walford Davies, in awarding them 198 out of 200 marks, said that their performance was an inspiration. At the evening concert Dr. Walford Davies's children's cantata 'Humpty Dumpty' was given, under the direction of the composer. The broader features of this direction of the composer. excellent example of the fanciful imagination of Dr. Davies were much appreciated, but the subtleties of the music and dialogue were lost in the immense hall in which the performance took place.

On the second day the local choirs competed. It speaks volumes for the educative effects of the festival that the standard in these classes has now reached that of the open classes of a few years back. Lancaster Wesley (Mr. A. Dowthwaite) was first in the chief class, Carnforth (Mr. E. E. Unsworth) second, and Morecambe West End Wesleyan (Mr. S. Morphet) third. Ten choirs competed in this class. The test-pieces were the part-songs 'Love' (Elgar), 'Shepherds all' (Percy Pitt) and 'Summer and Winter' (B. Tours). Morecambe West End Wesleyan gained the female-voice choir prize, and Ambleside Wesleyan (Mr. T. B. Atkinson) that for the smaller mixed-voice class. The Girls' Friendly Societies' choirs in this district are admirably trained by devoted ladies. The Morecambe Choir (Miss R. Duff) gained the first place by its highly refined singing of the four test-pieces, one of which was the psalm for female voices 'Veni Domine' (Hear my prayer) by Mendelssohn.

In the afternoon a church choir festival, in which twelve churches were represented, was held in St. Laurence's Church. The service was sung by the Rev. H. Dams, the Precentor of Carlisle Cathedral, and Dr. H. Walford Davies directed the choral music. Mr. Percy W. de Courcy Smale was the organist. An evening concert and some final competitions wound up the day's proceedings. One outstanding feature was the admirable performance of two movements of Mendelssohn's String quartet in A minor, Op. 13, by a party of young ladies from Bradford led by Miss Ada Sharp.

On the 15th there were no competitions, and the interest of the visitors was concentrated on a miscellaneous concert given in the evening. The Isle of Man Choir (Mr. J. D. Looney) sang six part-songs in excellent style. Miss Agnes Nicholls, accompanied by Mr. Hamilton Harty, sang splendidly twenty songs, representing many schools, including Debussy. Mr. Herbert Brown greatly distinguished himself by his highly temperamental performance of six of Sir Hubert Parry's English lyrics. A very fine performance of Mendelssohn's Pianoforte trio in D minor was given by Mr. A. Catterall (violin), Mr. Warburton (violoncello) and Mr. R. J. Forbes (pianoforte).

The last day's proceedings created the usual interest and excitement. All the classes were open to the whole country, and choirs were attracted from a wide area, including Belfast, Newcastle, Nottingham, Melton Mowbray and many towns nearer to Morecambe. In all there were forty choirs, three string orchestras and two full orchestras. The fact that the choral technique exhibited on these occasions is often so splendid induced the promoters to try a novel test in the chief choral class. A series of test-pieces was especially composed for the occasion by Dr. Walford Davies. This consisted of a short cycle of unaccompanied choral songs, the words of which had been culled from various sources and entitled 'England's pleasant land.' The first of these songs was not in any way marked for expression, and it was left to each conductor to find an interpretation. All the numbers afford fine scope for choral technique and inspiring expression. Another of the mixed-voice choir tests was a setting by Dr. J. W. G. Hathaway of Herbert's poem 'Justice.' This is a fine specimen of broad and dignified writing in the madrigalian polyphonic style. The following are the chief results of the competitions:

The following are the chief results of the competitions:

Female-Voice Choirs (not more than thirty-six voices): Test-pieces, 'The sleeping beauty' (Woyrsch) and 'Song of the spirits' (Corder), I, Lancaster Choir (Mr. W. Aldous), 187 marks; 2, Barrow St. James's Ladies' Choir (Mrs. Bourne), 165 marks.

Male-Voice Choirs (not more than thirty voices): Test-pieces, 'The linden blossom' (Moellendorff) and 'Three men of Gotham' (Lloyd). 1, Colne Orpheus Glee Union (Mr. T. Wilkinson), 184 marks; 2, Carlisle Glee Union (Mr. W. O. Darley), 183; equal third, Mexborough Orpheus Glee Singers (Mr. G. A. Nixon), Belfast Ulster Male-Voice Choir (Mr. S. Holmes), and Sheffield Glee and Madrigal Society (Mr. W. H. Robinson), 181.

Male-Voice Choirs (not more than forty voices): Test-pieces, 'Happy light, happy day' (Scharwenka), 'Media Vita' (Bruch), and 'Sturmlied' (Fauth). 1. Newcastle-on-Tyne Glee and Madrigal Society (Mr. W. S. Nesbitt), 283 marks; 2, Manchester Orpheus Glee Society (Mr. J. R. Liddell), 283 marks; 2, Manchester Orpheus Glee Society (Mr. W. S. The victory of Mr. Aldous's choir in the female-voice choir class, and notably in the challenge shield class, was popular. This is the first time the Lancaster Choir has held the coveted shield. The Isle of Man Choir, from whom it was wrested, were scarcely up to their usual form and did not succeed in gaining a place in the final. Both Mrs. Bourne's Barrow Choir and Mr. Tattersall's Southport Choir sang splendidly. The victory of Newcastle in the chief male-voice choir section was notable because they were newcomers, and they had formidable competitors to overcome. They owed their success mainly to their clean and finished performance of the unvocal and otherwise unattractive 'Sturmlied,' composed by Fauth.

The adjudicators were Dr. W. G. McNaught, Dr. H. Walford Davies, Mr. Harry Evans and Mr. C. H. Fogg.

The following are brief records of other Competition Festivals:

WARMINSTER, WILTSHIRE (April 28). - There were twenty-one entries in the various classes, and much improvement was manifest in all the sections. The Rev. Dr. Davis, organist of the Wells Cathedral, was the judge. The Corsham Choir carried off three first-prizes and won the challenge shield, which was competed for on this occasion for the first time. The prizes were distributed by the Duchess of Somerset, who spoke of the great value of these competitions. Wiltshire certainly does not mean to be behind in the competitive movement.

BOURNE, SOUTH KESTEVEN, LINCOLNSHIRE (April28 and 29).—This is a new festival promoted mainly by the Countess of Ancaster, of Grimsthorpe Castle. The entries in the school classes were fair and in the adult classes numerous. It was evident that the district appreciated the advantages offered by the competitions. In one of the choral classes there were thirteen entries and in another four entries. Dr. McNaught NORTHAMPTON (May 2 and 9).—The adjudicators at this festival were Dr. Walford Davies, Miss Liddell and Mr. S. H. Nicholson. On the first (senior) day classes for madrigal, part-song and anthem singing were heard; classes for ladies'- and men's-voice choirs; and instrumental classes. Entries were good, and the high standard of previous years was kept up. The children's day afforded competitions for two-part and unison singing by school choirs, solo singing and pianoforte and violin playing, and solo sight-singing. The prizes were distributed by Lady Margaret Loder. The secretary is the Hon. Norah Dawnay. The festival was established by the late Lady Althorp.

PONTEFRACT (May 5, 6 and 7).—The syllabus was comprehensive, and drew a great number of entries. Osgoldcross, under Mr. R. B. Walker, won the chief choral prize, the test for which was the part-song 'Autumn' (Brahms). The evening concert was very successful. Two hundred voices under Mr. Walker combined to sing with

SWALEDALB, Richmond, Yorks (May 6 and 7).—This was the ninth festival held in this charming district. The shield for choral societies was won by a Richmond society.
Dr. Walford Davies and Mr. A. Wilson were adjudicators.

MALVERN, (May 7, 8, 9).—There was no children's competition here, but in place thereof there was a children's concert which was popular. The Hartlebury Choir gained the chief choral prize. Dr. Allen and Dr. Buck were the WITHAM, ESSEX, (May 8, 9).—The third annual festival was successful. Formerly one day sufficed, but the expansion necessitated the second day. Dr. H. P. Allen and Mr. James Bates adjudicated.

SPILSBY, EAST LINCOLNSHIRE (May 11 and 12).—This festival was inaugurated by the late Mrs. Stephen Massingberd. Her husband this year determined to go on with the work. The children sang generally very creditably, and there was some refined singing in the adult classes. Burgh gained the Choral Society prize. A very successful concert was conducted by Miss Susan Lushington, the programme including Stanford's 'Last post.' Mrs. Montgomery and Mr. Roland Jackson sang solos, and Mr. Burgess's orchestra contributed orchestral pieces and accompaniments. Lady Winifrede Cary-Elwes and Lady Willoughby de Eresby distributed the prizes. Dr. McNaught adjudicated.

LEITH HILL, DORKING (May 13).—There were no school or junior classes in this scheme. Nine choirs conschool or junior classes in this scheme. Nine choirs contributed sixty-four entries in various sections. Coldharbour (Miss Vaughan Williams) won the cup offered to femalevoice choirs, Shere (Mr. Whittington), the banner for madrigal singing, Capel (Mr. Gore), the banner for malevoice choirs, and Shalford (Miss F. B. Clarke), the banner for chorus singing. Much importance is given to combined performance. On this occasion Bach's cantata 'Sleepers, wake' and Beethoven's C minor Symphony were performed. Dr. Vaughan Williams conducted. Dr. Allen and Mr. Henry R. Bird adjudicated.

The Buxton, High Wycombe (Berks, Bucks and Oxon), Eskdale (Whitby), Lytham and Warrington festivals and the Feis Ceoil (Dublin) will be reported in our July issue.

Vienna, May 15.

THE BRAHMS MONUMENT.

On May 7, a day memorable as the seventy-fifth anniversary of the birth of Johannes Brahms, the monument to the memory of the master was unveiled with all due festive solemnity. The sculptor, Professor Rudolf Weyr, has depicted the composer in a sitting posture, with the appearance of being lost in thought. The massive granite pedestal bears one of the genii touching the strings of a lyre. The whole monument, 5.40 metres in height, is placed in the park in the neighbourhood of the Karlsgasse, where Brahms lived from 1865 until his death in 1897. The memorial committee, under the presidency of Baron Weckbecker, arranged two festival concerts at which, notwith-standing the hot weather, not a vacant seat was to be seen; the audience too was most select. On May 6 were given the 'Fest- und Gedenksprüche' and the 'German Requiem,' with Schalk as conductor and Baroness Leonore Bach and Dr. Felix von Kraus as soloists, the Vocal Society and the orchestra of the Court Opera contributing to the success of the concert.

On the second evening the complete cycle of Romances om Tieck's 'Die schöne Magelone' were sung by Frau Bricht-Pyllemann and Dr. Felix von Kraus, Ferdinand Loewe officiating at the pianoforte. The sugary and also thoroughly tedious text of the poem was recited by the Court actress Frau Stella Hohenfels. Many admirers and friends of Brahms had travelled from foreign countries in order to be present at this important event.

At the Court Opera, after a pause of twelve years, Flotow's old, yet fresh and youthful opera 'Stradella' was revived. It had been admirably rehearsed, and Herr Slezak, who took the title-rôle, was excellent. The performance aroused unusual enthusiasm. This shows that the public, weary of tone effects, dissonances, blood and adultery, finds pleasure in flowing and yet refined music. A quite childlike pleasure was taken in the melody, and in the droll humour of the piece. — Director Weingartner appears determined to exercise tern discipline at the Opera house, and has issued strict rules to be observed by the staff. And there is no longer any doubt that the Opera orchestra will vote for his being conductor of the Philharmonic concerts, and thus put an end to the unbecoming guest conducting by foreign capellmeisters.

Meanwhile it has been settled that the Conservatorium, which for well nigh a century has been maintained by the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde and brought to its present state of prosperity, will on January I be handed over to the State. The teaching staff hopes thereby to obtain higher fees-and higher pensions.

Of more than ordinary interest was the testimonial concert given in the Town Hall on May 2, by the Birmingham Choral Union, to its popular conductor Mr. Thomas Facer, in commemoration of his twenty-one years' uninterrupted services rendered to the Society as chorus-master and conductor. The concert was devoted to Gounod's opera 'Faust,' an excellent all-round performance being realised under Mr. Thomas Facer's conductorship. The soloists were Madame de Vere Sapio, Mr. Wilson Pembroke and Mr. John Ridding, assisted by Miss Marie Stiven, a contralto gifted with a pleasing and sympathetic voice, and Mr. Alfred Askey, a local baritone who ably gave the music allotted to Valentine. During the interval Mr. Isaac Bradley, a vice-president of the Society, presented Mr. Thomas Facer, on behalf of the members, with a splendidly illuminated address handsomely framed.

The Moody-Manners Opera Company concluded a week's operatic season at our Theatre Royal on May 2, during which they gave a revival of Verdi's 'La Traviata' and Halevy's 'La Juive.' Madame de Vere Sapio, the prima-donna in both operas, sang with her customary brilliance and artistic finish. 'Tannhäuser,' 'Faust,' 'Madama Butterfly' and 'Maritana' were also performed. The principal tenor was Mr. Joseph O'Mara, while Madame Fanny Moody added fresh laurels to her long and arduous operatic career by her wonderfully emotional and sympathetic portrayal of Madama Butterfly.

The fourth annual season of promenade concerts extending to three weeks was inaugurated on May 18 at the Theatre Royal, under Mr. Max Mossel's direction. The conductor is again Mr. Landon Ronald, and the executive comprises an orchestra of about seventy performers, mostly local players. A number of new works by English and foreign composers will find a place in the programmes.

second concert organized by the Birmingham University Musical Society was given in its own locale on May 6, under Herr Willy Lehmann's conductorship. The choral and orchestral forces number at present about sixty performers. The programme comprised three part-songs for mixed choir, 'The brook,' 'Slumber song,' and 'Barcarolle' by MacDowell, and three choral songs from Elgar's 'From the Bavarian Highlands.' The instrumental portion included Mozart's overture 'Idomeneo' and three movements from Mozart's overture 'Idomeneo' and three movements and Tchaikovsky's Serenade in C for strings. The students of the University Training College for Teachers gave a concert in the large lecture theatre of the Midland Institute on April 20 ander Mr. Arnold Griffin's conductorship. The April 29, under Mr. Arnold Griffin's conductorship. principal feature centred in a rendering of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast' and 'The death of Minnehaha,' the accompaniments to which were played on the pianoforte.

The West Bromwich Choral Society's second concert was held at the Town Hall on April 29. The chief attraction proved to be the excellent singing of the chorus in a number of madrigals by Orlando Gibbons, Elgar, Cornelius, Rimsky-Korsakov, &c. Mr. William Henley contributed violin solos, given with his customary brilliance, and he also joined Mr. Arthur Cooke in a Sonata for pianoforte and violin, composed by the latter, which was most enthusiastically received. Mr. Charles Collier was heard to advantage in some brilliantly executed harp solos. Mr. Arthur Cooke ably filled the dual rôle of solo pianist and conductor.

The Birmingham and Handsworth Orchestral Society and the Midland Musical Society combined their forces in giving an interesting popular concert in the Town Hall on April 16.

Mr. Johan C. Hock conducted the orchestral items and secured a praiseworthy reading of Beethoven's second Symphony, Tchaikovsky's 'Elégie' (for strings), Sibelius's symphonic poem 'En saga,' and the Introduction to Act III. of 'Lohengin.' The members of the Bristol Royal Orpheus Glee Society visited Bath on April 28, and gave a concert at the Assembly Rooms in aid of a proposed nurses' home at the Bath Royal United Hospital. On five previous occasions the Bristol choir had, in response to invitations, paid visits to Bath; on this occasion they were assisted by Miss Gertrude Winchester and Miss Madeline Applegate. Mr. George Riseley directed a performance which was much appreciated, as the pieces chosen, in addition to some particular favourites which have charmed Bristolians upon many occasions, included others recently added to the Society's répertoire. Particularly impressive were Dr. S. S. Wesley's 'I wish to tune my quiv'ring lyre,' MacDowell's 'Dance of Gnomes,' 'The old soldier's dream' (Peter Cornelius), Sullivan's 'The Beleaguered,' Hegar's 'Phantom Host,' and Cruickshank's 'Stars of the summer night.' During the interval Mr. S. W. Bush (the Ex-Mayor) expressed the thanks of the Hospital Committee to the Bristol Society.

One of the youngest societies of the city, the Clifton Male Voice Choir, gave a concert at the Redland Park Hall on May 7, and afforded a gratifying proof of progress during the

This was as usual the miscellaneous concert, the artists being Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Miss Mildred Jones, Mr. James Horncastle, Mr. Vincent Jones (vocalists), and Mrs. A. J. Jaeger (violinist). The programme consisted of various songs excellently rendered by the vocalists named above; and Mrs. Jaeger gave admirable performances of the following violin solos: 'Andante molto moderato' (d'Ambrosio), 'Perpetuum mobile' (Novácek), Gavotte in C (Handel) and 'Reel' (C. V. Stanford).

The Gloucester Instrumental Society gave a concert in aid

The Gloucester Instrumental Society gave a concert in aid of the District Nursing Society on April 30, the instrumentalists most ably acquitting themselves in Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony in B minor; the 'Valse des Fleurs' from Tchaikovsky's 'Casse Noisette' suite; Rosse's 'Merchant of Venice' suite; grande fantasia 'Samson and Delilah' (Saint-Saëns), and 'William Tell' overture (Rossini). Solos were contributed by Madame Le Mar, Mr. Charles Collier (harp), and Mr. Tom Woodward, a brother of the conductor, Mr. Joseph Woodward.

The second concert of the season, organized by the Stroud Choral Society under their able conductor Mr. S. W. Underwood, was held on May 5. The works performed were Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and Dr. Brewer's choral ballad 'Sir Patrick Spens,' the latter conducted by the composer. The band and chorus numbered 150 performers. The soloists were Miss Alice Prowse, Miss Phyllis Maddy, Mr. Albert Watson and Mr. Arthur Wynn. The last-named is a native of Painswick, near Gloucester.

The month of May brought us the veteran French composer, Dr. Camille Saint-Saëns, who was present at the fourth of the French concerts on May 12, when the programme was constituted entirely of his compositions. Dr. Saint-Saëns not only played all the pianoforte accompaniments, but co-operated with Madame Chailley-Richez in the performance of two of his pieces for two pianofortes-Rêverie du Soir' and a Scherzo—and of his later and most interesting Pianoforte trio in E minor. The String quartet in E minor, played by Messrs. Chailley, Gravrand, Jurgensen and Schidenhelm, opened the concert. Madame Georges Marty sang a series of songs; M. Marcel Chailley, a really able executant, who appeared at a previous concert, played the Concertstück (Op. 20) dedicated to Sarasate; and M. Schidenhelm contributed two violoncello solos, 'Le Cygne' and an Allegro appassionato.

The last of the concerts of the Beethoven Society was given on April 28, under the honorary conductorship of Mr. E. Gordon Cockrell. The programme included the 'Hebrides,' 'Magic flute' and 'Rienzi' overtures, the first movement of the 'Pastoral' symphony, and Widor's rarely heard ballet suite 'La Korrigane.' Mr. A. Barnes, a local amateur, played Mozart's Violin concerto in A, and a Presided and Romance from a smits by Pairs, and Mice Prelude and Romance from a suite by Reiss, and Miss Gertrude Grant contributed songs.

The last of the Brodsky Quartet Concerts was given on May 7. The programme comprised Boccherini's String quartet No. 2 in E minor, Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte trio in A minor (Op. 50), and the Beethoven Quartet in B flat (Op. 130). Mr. Percy Grainger at the pianoforte helped to secure a specially fine interpretation of the Trio. The Edith Robinson Quartet, consisting of Miss Edith Robinson, Miss Isabel McCullagh, Miss Edith Craven and Miss Mary McCullagh, played surprisingly well at the concert given on May 4, at which Mozart's Quartet in C (Op. 76), Dvorák's Quartet in E flat (Op. 51), and Beethoven's Quartet in E flat (Op. 74) were performed. The following Wednesday, May 6, the Newcastle and District Catholic Choral Society gave, with orchestral accompaniment, Haydn's 16th Mass, under the baton of Mr. E. J. Rogers. It is greatly to be regretted that this Society is not working on the best lines possible. There is such an immense amount of Catholic church music of sterling value which many people would be glad to hear performed by a choral society of this size, that it is a pity that the purely instrumental portions of their concerts should include such poor items as selections from 'Cavalleria Rusticana.'

On May 13 the Durham Musical Society performed Elgar's 'King Olaf.' Miss Mabel Crow, Mr. S. Masters and Mr. R. Burnett were the soloists, and the Cathedral assistant-organist, Mr. W. Ellis, conducted. Two orchestral numbers completed the programme; both were preceded and Sibelius's 'Finlandia' succeeded the cantata, peculiarly appropriate, Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' overture the one dealing with a land resembling the scene of the tales, the other with a people akin to the heroes.

The Newcastle Musical Festival Guarantee Fund has now mounted to the sum of £7,000. It is expected that arrangements will be made at an early date for the proposed music-making in the autumn of next year.

MUSIC IN NORWICH AND DISTRICT. (FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Norwich Philharmonic Society concluded a very The Norwich Philharmonic Society concluded a very successful season by a concert-performance of Wagner's 'Flying Dutchman,' on May 7, at St. Andrew's Hall, the chorus being furnished by the Norwich Choral Society. Dr. Bates, who conducted, secured an excellent performance. The principals were Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, Mr. Alfred Heather, Mr. William Higley and Mr. Frederic Austin. The concert, which was largely attended, was one of the best ever given by the joint Societies, and Dr. Bates is to be sincerely congratulated upon the progress made since he assumed the baton. The Saturday Evening Popular Concerts, under the management of Dr. Bunnett, have also had a successful season, and at the last concert the artists engaged were Miss Phyllis Lett and Mr. Joseph Reed. During the concert the Sheriff, who, with the members of the Corporation was present, congratulated Dr. Bunnett and the management on the success achieved. Among other artists who have appeared during the season are the following: Miss Winifred Siddons, Miss Gertrude Maxted, Miss May Doubleday, Miss Muriel Webb, Miss Kate Rooney, Miss Evelyn Tyser, Miss Cassie Crang, Miss Winifred Saunders, Miss Edith Nutter, Mr. Alexander Tucker, Mr. David Brazell, Mr. Edgar Coyle, Mr. Robin Overleigh, Mr. John Bardsley, Mr. Harry Stubbs and Mr. Philip Ritte.

The rehearsals for the ensuing Norwich Musical Festival

The rehearsals for the ensuing Norwich Musical Festival are now in full progress, and several of the works selected for performance have been carefully rehearsed, under the conductorship of Mr. Henry J. Wood. The festival is announced to be held on October 28 and the three following days.

The Great Yarmouth Musical Society gave its second and last concert of the season at the Town Hall on April 28, when Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' formed the chief feature of the evening's music. The singing of the choir in this familiar work and of Leslie's 'Lullaby of life' in the second part of the programme reflected great credit on all concerned, especially on Mr. Haydon Hare, the capable conductor of the Society. Mr. Hare has also conducted a successful performance of Gilbert and Sullivan's 'H.M.S. Pinafore' given by the Great Yarmouth Amateur Operatic Society.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT. (FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Retford Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. John Smith, gave its second concert on St. George's Day (April 23), when Handel's 'Judas Maccabeus' was well rendered by a band and chorus of 120 performers. solos were sung by Miss Emily Shepherd, Miss Ethel Meggitt, Mr. Fred Fallas and the Rev. R. Spurrell, all of whom materially contributed to the success of the concert.

The Skegness Musical Society gave its sixth annual concert in the King's Hall on St. George's Day, when Barnett's 'The Ancient Mariner' was performed. The solos were ably rendered by Miss Bertha Lewendon, Miss Edith Killer (a Canadian contralto), Mr. Charles Nicholson and Mr. Joseph Lycett. Mr. J. W. Smethurst, of Grimsby, conducted. On April 28 the South Wilford (Nottingham) Choral Society gave a performance of Dr. Cummings's cantata 'The fairy ring,' under the direction of Mr. Cyril Harris. The solos were admirably sung by Madame Wilson Moulds, Madame Ethel Edgar, Mr. Herbert Smith and Mr. E. S. Edgar, and the accompaniments received careful treatment at the hands of Miss Mabel Goodyer and Miss Lamb.

At the concert given by the students of Nottingham University on April 29, Elgar's 'The Black Knight' was performed in a manner which reflected the greatest credit upon Professor Henderson, who had trained the choir of nearly 200 voices. Sales and Allahafall. nearly 200 voices. Solos were delightfully sung by Miss Eva Cook and Mr. Bamford. Miss Winifred Stevenson played Chopin's Nocturne in G and Polonaise in C sharp minor, and Mr. E. Smeeton was responsible for the accompaniments.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT. (FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The revival of Gounod's 'Redemption,' given at the Spring concert of the Sheffield Amateur Musical Society on May 5, proved completely successful. The Albert Hall was crowded, and the Society gave a memorable and impressive performance of the work. Mr. J. A. Rodgers, the conductor, adopted quicker tempi at several points of the oratorio, notably in the dramatic sections and in the final chorus; once the propriety of such a course is admitted, there is no doubt as to the enhanced effectiveness and vitality of the oratorio. The choir excelled themselves, singing with such point, precision and expressiveness as they have never before surpassed. The playing of the Harry Smith.

orchestra was no less admirable, the accompaniments being models of restraint. The 'March to Calvary' and the episodes of 'The darkness' and 'The Apostles in prayer' were beautifully played by this excellent body of sixty instrumentalists, nearly all of whom were local musicians. The soloists were Miss Edith Evans (who made a brilliant first appearance in Sheffield), Miss Bessie Unwin, Miss Maud Johnston, Mr. Webster Millar, Mr. Thorpe Bates and Mr. Julien Henry. The artistic organ-playing of Bates and Mr. Julien Henry. The artistic organ-playing of Mr. J. W. Phillips added effectiveness to the ensemble. That the oratorio was enjoyed by the audience was obvious from the enthusiastic applause which followed the termination of each division.

MUSIC IN THE SOUTH-WEST COUNTIES. (FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Few districts are more at a disadvantage topographically for the culture of concerted music either choral or instrumental than the south-west corner of England. Its distance from the metropolis, its land's-end position, peninsular formation and rural character are all conditions which make the cultivation of music both in town and country not only difficult but expensive. Thus it is particularly gratifying to note the increase in the number of choral societies, chiefly in small country places where members have almost in every case rough roads and long distances to travel for their weekly rehearsals, and where the difficulty of securing even a scratch band is one involving hard work and expense. In many cases the conductors are men of high aim and enthusiasm who spare neither effort nor pocket in their desire to attain a high standard, and this often to their serious personal inconvenience.

THE THREE TOWNS.

Though Plymouth, Devonport and Stonehouse do not suffer from the disadvantages of the rural districts, they do not in the matter of choral music show any advance in quantity. fact, some of the old societies have ceased to exist, and the ground is left open to the few who have survived the risks of competition and want of support. These exist in Plymouth only. Devonport and Stonehouse participate in the efforts of the premier (by size and name) town, but do not exercise any enterprise on their own account, though it is due to Devonport to say that a suggestion has been made during this season to form a local choral society, but apparently the idea has fallen through. The old-established choral and orchestral societies of Dr. and Mr. Walter Weekes are still progressing, the latter having during the past two seasons adopted the subscription scheme. At the second and last concert, on February 26, Beethoven's Symphony in C minor and two movements from that of Raff in C were played.

The Misses Smith deserve commendation and thanks for their presevering efforts in the cause of chamber music, without which efforts Plymouth would be dependent in this particular almost entirely on visiting virtuosi. On January 2, Brahms's Pianoforte quintet (Op. 34) was successfully played by the Misses Florence and Lily Smith, Messrs. A. E. Serie and H. R. Ball, and Mrs. H. R. Freeman. On February 19 a Sonata by Veracini for pianoforte and violin was introduced, a Sonata for pianoforte and violoncello by César Franck was played, and the F major Pianoforte trio of Schumann, the performers being the trio of sisters, Misses Florence and Lily Smith and Mrs. Freeman.

The orchestral band of the Plymouth R.G.A. gave a fine

The orchestral band of the Plymouth R.G.A. gave a fine concert on May 2 under Mr. R. G. Evans. Its pieces included Tchaikovsky's suite 'La belle au bois dormant,' Widor's suite de ballet 'Korrigane,' and Smetana's overture to 'The bartered bride.' Miss Helen Sealy, an accomplished artist, played Ernst's Violin concerto in F sharp minor. Dr. Weekes' Choral Society, assisted by the Orchestral Society, performed, on January 2, Parry's 'Pied Piper of Hamelin' and Elgar's 'The Banner of St. George,' the principals being Messrs. John Gill and J. S. Gilbert. Mr. Manley Martin's Choral Society which, numbering 100 voices, locates itself chiefly in the northern suburbs of Mutley and Mannamead, on February 12 sang with its Mutley and Mannamead, on February 12 sang with its usual high degree of culture Barnett's 'Building of the ship,' the soloists being Madame Lillian Langdon, Miss Winifred Carter, Madame Maggie Shute, and Messrs. John Gill and

The Lenten performance of 'The Redemption' on March 7 was the only concert given by the fine Guildhall Choir in the Spring. The choir, numbering 270 voices, here excelled itself for beauty and volume of vocal tone and sang with good expression. Mr. H. Moreton conducted, and the soloists were Miss Mabel Manson, Messrs. Wilfrid Virgo, Graham Smart and Reginald Gooud. The band, led by Mr. John Pardew, was unusually efficient. The second annual concert given by the Plymouth Male-Voice Choir on April 27 established it as an important and essential feature in the musical life of the town. On this occasion the boys, for unavoidable reasons, were dispensed with. The men, however, sang in excellent time and tune and with rich quality of tone, two descriptive pieces— 'The destruction of Gaza' (Laurent de Rillé) and 'Cyrus in Babylon' (Boulanger)—which contrasted well with Abt's 'Holy calm and stillness' and 'Evening's repose.' Mr. W. H. Henley (violin), Mr. de Blois Rowe (pianoforte) and Miss Ethel Lister (vocalist) assisted, and Mr. David Parkes conducted.

A Glee Club established in connection with the Municipal Secondary Schools, gave a concert on May 6 conducted by Mr. J. S. Gilbert. A novel experiment has been tried by a party of artists from the neighbourhood, directed by Mr. L. G. Sydenham, of giving concerts to the convicts in Dartmoor Prison. The three already given, on Christmas Day, January 5 and April 26, have met with much appreciation from the audiences.

'Merrie England' was performed at the theatre during the week beginning. Exhaustry, to by the Plumonth Apartage.

week beginning February 10 by the Plymouth Amateur Operatic Society, with Miss Alice Prowse as prima-donna and Mr. R. Ball as musical director. Mrs. Herring-Mason's Grand Opera Class performed 'Il Ballo in Maschera' on March 10 and 'Il Trovatore' on Easter Monday.

EXETER.

The St. Anne's Choral Society, which has had a struggle for existence in its infancy, is now well established, and in a performance on February 5 of Barnett's 'The Ancient Mariner' it justifiably attempted something more ambitious than on former occasions. At the same concert was produced a dramatic cantata, composed by Dr. Ferris Tozer, entitled 'Marcus Tertius,' for three male solo voices and chorus. The work made a very good impression, and the singing of the choir in both cantatas, under the direction of Mr. Allan Allen, was excellent. The band was led by Mr. C. E. Bell.

On May 20 the recently amalgamated Western Counties Musical Association and Exeter Oratorio Society held their first festival at Exeter. Dr. D. J. Wood conducted performances of Mendelssohn's 'Athalie' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's departure,' and Dr. H. J. Edwards conducted a performance of 'The Martyr of Antioch.' The choir numbered nearly 300 voices, and though an increase in volume was noticeable, other results of the amalgamation, good or bad, could not at a first hearing be calculated. There was, perhaps, more attention to expression, but there was lack of attention to the conductor's beat. The soloists throughout the day were the Misses Grace Roberts, Kathleen Wood, Ethel Wakeham, Messrs. Alfred Heather and Charles Knowles. The band, led by Mr. John Pardew, was excellent, and the harp playing of Mr. A. Manning deserves mention. I would like to pay a tribute to Mr. Isaacs, double-bass, who during thirty years' service in the district has become a familiar figure—indeed, almost an indispensable one—in local orchestras. Mr. Isaacs has been appointed professor of his instrument at the Naval School of Music at Eastney, upon which he is to be congratulated.
On May 12 the Exeter Orchestral Society, conducted by Dr. Wood, performed a programme which included Sibelius's 'Finlandia,' Mendelssohn's 'Reformation' symphony and Boëllmann's 'Variations Symphoniques,' for violoncello and orchestra, with Miss May Bartlett in the solo part. Mrs.

Marian Penry was the vocalist.

In opera music the local amateur operatic society took a step forward in its week's performance at the theatre of 'The Mikado,' beginning on February 21. The chorus sang well, Mr. Allan Allen being musical director. Miss Louise Sims, a local singer and student at the Royal Academy of Music, gave two concerts on May 1, proving herself a conscientious student and the possessor of a fine voice.

BARNSTAPLE.

On February 19, the Barnstaple Choral Society rendered 'St. Paul' under the direction of Mr. W. M. Jones, with Miss Ethel Lister, Miss Ethel Parkin and Messrs. Ernest Pike and David Hughes as principals. Mr. R. Ball led the band.

The Barnstaple Musical Festival Society has this year attained its jubilee, an event which was utilised by the municipal authorities as an occasion to present the freedom of the borough to the conductor, Dr. H. J. Edwards, as an appreciation of the high position he has attained in the musical world. The Festival Society on April 22—the day of the presentation—gave in the afternoon a first performance in Barnstaple of Dr. Edwards's oratorio 'The risen Lord,' which was as enthusiastically received as it was performed by the conductor's loyal followers. In the evening 'The Golden Legend' was performed, and in both works the bright, spontaneous singing of the choir and its command of expression were a source of artistic pleasure. The principals on each occasion were Miss Esta d'Argo, Miss Alice Lakin, Messrs. Alfred Heather and Charles Knowles, and the band was led by Mr. John Pardew.

OTHER DEVONSHIRE TOWNS.

In point of date, though not of size, the Millbrook Choral and Orchestral Society comes first to mention with a performance, on January 22, of 'The wreck of the Hesperus' (Fisher), conducted by Mr. P. P. Wedlake. A second concert, on May 6, included a cantata, 'The holy Grail,' by H. E. Nichol. Selections from 'St. Paul' and Grail, by H. E. Nichol. Selections from 'St. Paul' and independent choruses were sung on February 21 by the Modbury Choral Society, under Dr. Weekes. 'John Gilpin' was given by the Bovey Tracey Choral Society on February 27, conducted by Mr. W. R. Back. 'The rose maiden' was performed by the Totnes Choral Society on the same date, conducted by Mr. Herbert Worth. On March 2 the Brent Choral Society, under the baton of Mr. David Parkes, sang Parry's 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day,' with Madame Lillian Langdon and Mr. Percy Taylor as soloists. The high standard of work selected and of performance which is invariably attained by the Torquay Musical Society, under its artistic conductor, Mr. T. H. Webb, was emphasized again on March 24, when the programme included two overtures, the 'Pastoral' Symphony and 'The death of Minnehaha.' Mr. H. E. Crocker was the leader of the band, and Miss Mabel Manson and Mr. Walter Williams were the principal vocalists. Starting the season with a debt of £50, the Exmouth Choral Society, under its energetic conductor Mr. Raymond Wilmot, has, by its own unaided endeavours, closed the season with entire its own unaided endeavours, closed the season with entire clearance of accounts. The last performance was of 'The Creation,' on April 22, the choir singing finely. 'The Revenge,' was sung by the Plympton Choral Society (conductor, Mr. Walter Weekes) on April 28; 'The Creation' by the Dawlish Choral Society on April 30 (conducted by Mr. J. F. King); 'The May Queen' (Bennett) and 'May Day' (Macfarren) by the Newton Choral Society (conductor Mr. W. J. Rawa) on May A are Choral Society (conductor, Mr. W. J. Bown) on May 4, are performances worthy of mention.

Cowen's 'The rose maiden' was given on April 29 by the Lynton and Lynmouth Choral Society, Mr. E. B.

Erridge conducting, the choir singing vigorously and well.

A new society formed at Ivybridge, with Mr. Arthur Coombe as conductor, wisely confined its efforts to part-Songs, very well sung, at its inaugural concert on May 6. On the same date 'The Creation' was given by the Okehampton Choral Society, conducted by Mr. S. J. Janes; and the Ashburton Choral Society sang Gaul's 'The Holy City' on May 7, under the excellent direction of Mr. Harold Chamber music is more or less at a discount in this district, and therefore all the more praise is due to the Haydn String Quartet at Torquay, which has just closed its fifth year of excellent work. The members are Messrs. H. E. Crocker, F. Crocker, J. Stevens and C. T. Heaviside. On January 9 they played quartets by Schubert and Mendelssohn, and on April 9 the Opus 17 of Mozart and Dvorák's Op. 106. Teignmouth Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. A. J. James, gave its annual concert on April 23. The Wellington Harmonic Society performed 15th Paril on April 2 conducted by Mr. Aljan Allen. Chamber music is more or less at a discount in this on April 23. The Wellington Harmonic Society perf 'St. Paul' on April 3, conducted by Mr. Allan Allen.

CORNISH TOWNS.

Mr. E. A. Russell, conductor of the Lostwithiel Choral Society, deserves encouragement on account of the excellent singing of his choir in Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' on February 18. Bodmin Philharmonic Society possesses an exceptionally well-balanced choir, which, on February 19, rendered Cowen's 'The rose maiden' remarkably well, under the direction of Mr. A. H. Baker. Miss Caroline Hatchard, Miss Ethel Randall and Messrs. H. Turnpenney and G. S. Meadows were the soloists. The band was unusually good, led by Mr. T. H. W. Read, and with Miss Ethel Randall as the soloist played Mendelssohn's G minor Pianoforte concerto. Mr. Harold Lake has a small but enthusiastic Choral Society at the tiny town of Looe, which stands on the very edge of the sea, and two concerts were given on February 20, when the first part of the 'Hiawatha' trilogy was given an artistic and musicianly rendering, the principals being local artists. On the date (February 20) of the concert announced by the Launceston Choral Society, its hon. conductor, Mr. C. S. Parsonson, was taken ill. The organist, Mr. D. J. Coldwell, pluckily was taken ill. The organist, Mr. D. J. Coldwell, pluckily took up the baton, and a successful performance of 'St. Paul' was achieved, with Miss Caroline Hatchard, Miss Gladys Coppin, and Messrs. Henry Turnpenney and Charles Knowles as principals. On the next day, February 21, 'Joan of Arc' (Gaul) was performed by the Liskeard Choral Society, under the baton of Mr. A. C. Faull, with Miss C. Pope, Messrs. A. Hallett and Charles Knowles as soloists. The Spring concert of the Truro Philharmonic soloists. The Spring concert of the Truro Frinnarmonic Society took place on April 2, the works performed being Mendelssohn's 'Lauda Sion' and Schubert's 'Song of Miriam.' Madame C. Siviter, Miss Laura Smith (a local contralto), Mr. J. G. Truscott, and Mr. J. T. Dowsing (also a local singer) were the principals, and the Rev. Canon Corfe conducted. The St. Germans Choral Society, after to the conducted. The St. Germans choral Science, action having announced itself last season as about to cease operations, has happily resuscitated, and with renewed vigour gave a performance of Stanford's 'The Revenge' and Somervell's 'The forsaken Merman' on April 22. Mr. R. Glendinning conducted.

For charitable purposes, on February 28, the Penzance Amateur Orchestral Society gave an excellent concert, the most important piece being Leutner's Festival overture. Mr. Walter Barnes conducted. We are glad to welcome a newly-formed Orchestral Society at Looe, which gave a successful initial concert on April 21, under the baton of

Mr. A. Michell.

Foreign Motes.

BAYREUTH.

The festival performances will be given this year under the direction of Dr. Hans Richter, Dr. Karl Muck, and MM. Michael Balling and Siegfried Wagner. The list of vocalists includes Mesdames Gulbranson, Kraus-Osborne, Reuss-Belce and Edyth Walker; also MM. Briesemeister, Burrian, Kraus and Whitehill.

BERLIN.

At the second public competition, on April 26, the Ibach prize, founded by the Stern Conservatorium, was awarded to Miss Olga Weltmann, of Moscow, a pupil of Mr. Theodor Schönberger.—On May 1, Professor Theodor Krause celebrated the seventy-fifth anniversary of his birth. As a distinguished teacher, he has since 1895 been active in that capacity at the Royal Institute for Sacred Music.—The company of the Imperial Russian Opera has been announced to give performances of Glinka's 'Life for the Czar,' Rubinstein's 'Demon,' Naprawnik's 'Dombrowski,' and Tchaikovsky's 'Pique-Dame,' 'Eugen Onegin,' and 'Mazeppa,' at the Kroll Opera House between May 20 and June 10.—Also the ballet of the Imperial Maria Theatre at St. Petersburg were to give two performances at the Opéra Comique. One hundred performances have been given of Eugen D'Albert's opera 'Tiefland.'

BRUNSWICK.

It is proposed to erect a monument to Ludwig Spohr, who was born here in 1784. Franz Eck gave concerts in this city in 1802, and through the influence of the Duke of Brunswick, Spohr became his pupil; with what results is a matter of history.

BISENACH.

Maestro Lorenzo Perosi, who in his oratorios shows to some extent the influence of Bach, recently visited the birth-house of the great composer, and left the following record in the visitor's book: 'Magno Magistro parvus discipulus Laurentius Perosi.'

FLORENCE.

The recently constituted Choral Union made its first appearance at a concert given in the Circolo Filologico on April 30 with, on the whole, satisfactory results, the ladies' section of the choir promising excellently; the male portion however is at present inadequate numerically, but will, it is expected, be shortly augmented. The programme included Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens,' and the part-songs 'Awake, sweet love' (Dowland), 'If I had but two little wings' (Parry), and Pinsuti's 'Spring song,' the ladies of the choir being heard separately in Elgar's, 'The snow' and 'Fly, singing bird.' The care and energy displayed by Miss Jessie B. Handley in training the choir deserve due recognition.

FRANKFURT.

The Raff Conservatorium celebrated on May 3 the twenty-fifth anniversary of its foundation. In 1877 Joachim Raff was named director, and after his death, in 1882, Bernhard Schutz succeeded him. Two of the pupils of that institution have become celebrated—Richard Strauss and Friedrich Steinbach.

LEIPZIG.

The new monument to Bach, placed in front of St. Thomas's Church, was unveiled on Sunday, May 17.

MADRID

After his concerts with the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, at Paris, Dr. Richard Strauss came to this city, where he gave two Beethoven-Wagner-Strauss concerts at the Royal Theatre with immense success.

PARIS.

Rameau's opera 'Hippolyte et Aricie' was originally produced at Paris on October 1, 1733, and after a performance of his 'Castor et Pollux' in 1784 the composer's name was no longer seen on an opera bill until the 13th of last month, when the first-named work was revived at the Opéra. 'Hippolyte et Aricie' was Rameau's second attempt at opera. His first was 'Samson,' the poem of which was written for him by Voltare, but being on a Biblical subject its performance was forbidden. Things have changed since then, and another 'Samson,' the one by Saint-Saëns, although on the same subject, is permitted.—

At the express wish of Frau Cosima Wagner, Mlle. Louise Grandjéau will impersonate Brünnhilde at the forthcoming performance of 'Die Götterdämmerung' at the Opéra.

ST. PETERSBURG.

The well-known pianist, Annette Essipoff, has resigned her post of teacher at the Conservatoire of this city, and intends altogether to retire from public life. She was first heard in London in 1874.

WIESBADEN.

At a concert of the Kurorchester, the first symphony of Gustav Mahler, who is on a visit to Europe, was produced under his direction.

The death took place at Paris on May 8 of Ludovic Halévy, the eminent librettist, in his seventy-fourth year. In collaboration with Henri Meilhac, he compiled nine 'books' for Offenbach, including 'La Belle Hélène,' 'Barbe-Bleue,' 'La Grande Duchesse de Gerolstein,' and to this literary 'combination' we owe the libretto of Bizet's 'Carmen' and Lecocq's 'La Petit Duc' and 'Janot.' Halévy, who was a nephew of the composer of that name, also achieved fame as a novelist. He was a member of the French Academy and a Commander of the Legion of Honour.

The death is recorded with regret of Jacques Blumenthal, which took place on May 17 at his residence, Queen's House, Cheyne Walk, Chelsea. Born at Hamburg, the birthplace of Mendelssohn and Brahms, in 1829, he studied under Grund and Bocklet, and at Vienna under the famous Simon Sechter. For two years, 1846-48, he was a pianoforte pupil of Herz at the Paris Conservatoire. The troublous times of '48 on the Continent caused him, as they did Charles Hallé, to seek the shores of England, where he took up his abode and soon became well-known in fashionable circles as a teacher of music. Mr. Blumenthal is best remembered by his songs 'The Message,' 'My Queen' and 'The Requital,' but he also composed a Pianoforte trio and a large number of drawing-room pianoforte pieces. His best work he or in the shadow' and 'In the sunshine,' which are published by Messrs. Novello. Each book is enriched with a frontispiece drawing, representing respectively shadow and sunshine, graciously and specially designed for the volumes by H. R. H. the Princess Louise (Duchess of Argyll). In the preface Mr. Blumenthal says, 'In these short songs the composer has tried to give expression to some of our deeper feelings or questionings—such songs as one might sing to oneself, when in the mood, or to some intimate friends.'

The thirty-sixth annual festival of the London Sunday School Choir will take place at the Crystal Palace on Wednesday, June 17. Concerts will be given by the Junior Festival Choir of 5,000 voices, conducted by Mr. Wellard Matthews at 1 o'clock, and the Festival Choir, conducted by Mr. William Whiteman. The London Sunday School orchestra, conducted by Mr. Wesley Hammet, will accompany the choir and also render several orchestral pieces. There will be a choir competition: adjudicator, Mr. A. L. Cowley. Full particulars can be had from Mr. J. Bernord the veteran manager. Mr. J. Barnard, the veteran manager, 340, Green Lanes, Finsbury Park, N.

Mr. Dan Godfrey sends, as in previous years, a list of the works performed by the Municipal Orchestra, Bournemouth, of which he is the enthusiastic conductor. Of the 243 works performed, fifty were given for the first time at these concerts. Of these novelties thirty-two were from the pens of British composers, the total number of native productions, old and new, reaching the satisfactory total of sixty-two. Twentythree composers personally conducted their own works. The artistic enterprise of Mr. Dan Godfrey and the attention he gives to the music of his fellow countrymen deserve full

The Hereford Choral Society, at its Spring concert on April 24, gave a most successful performance of Dr. Walford Davies's cantata 'Everyman,' under the direction of Dr. Sinclair. The principal vocalists were Madame Siviter, Miss Jessie King, Mr. James Horncastle and Mr. William Higley. The choir and orchestra numbered 200 performers. The second part of the programme included Schubert's 'Alfonso and Estrella' Overture, and Bishop's glee 'Now tramp o'er moss and fell.' Mr. Bernhard Carrodus led the orchestra and Mr. Percy Hull was an efficient accompanist.

A series of summer concerts will be given at the Royal Military School of Music, Kneller Hall, on Wednesdays during June, July, August and September. The performances will commence at 3 30 and will be free, except on the last Wednesday in each month, when there will be a small charge for admission, and the concert will begin at 7.30 These excellent music-makings deserve every encouragement, and in listening to them a most enjoyable hour may be spent under pleasant conditions.

The following awards have recently been made at the Royal Academy of Music: Thalberg Scholarship (Pianoforte) to Francis Hutchens (New Zealand); Sterndale Bennett Scholarship (any branch of music) to Sydney Rosenbloom (Edinburgh); Threlfall Scholarship (Organ) to Horace G. Perry (London); Parepa-Rosa Scholarship (Singing) to Catherine M. Walker (London).

Mr. Gustav Ernest was the gratified recipient, on May 20, of a testimonial from the past and present pupils and the staff of his Conservatoire and the Sydenham Orchestral Society (of which he is conductor) in acknowledgment of his musical work in England during the past twenty-five years.

At the opening of the Franco-British Exhibition, Shepherd's Bush, on May 14, by the Prince and Princes Wales, the musical arrangements included an Ode, entitled 'A welcome song,' written for the occasion by the Duke of Argyll and set to music by Sir Charles V. Stanford, who conducted the performance.

Mr. W. G. Whittaker gave an interesting lecture-recital at Newcastle-on-Tyne, on May 9, before the members of the Incorporated Society of Musicians (Northern section), the subject of his discourse being 'Some notes on Debussy,' with musical illustrations.

Dr. Henry J. Edwards has been elected an honorary member of the Royal Academy of Music. The conferring of the freedom of the city of Barnstaple upon Dr. Edwards, to which we referred in our April number, is recorded on p. 404 of the present issue under 'Barnstaple.'

A new and original comic opera, entitled 'The Sakers'—the book by Mr. J. Lewis Campion, the lyrics by Mr. Claude Selfe—composed by Mr. Percy Bowie, was produced at the Balham Assembly Rooms on May 1.

Miss Janet Dodge read an interesting paper before the Musical Association on May 19, her subject being 'Lute music of the 16th and 17th centuries.' Illustrations were played on the pianoforte by Miss Kathleen Salmon.

At the Grand Festival of English Freemasons held on April 29, Major W. R. J. McLean, Mus B., was appointed Grand Organist for the ensuing year.

The most important features of the programme were Mendelssohn's 'Italian' symphony, Sullivan's Masque music in 'The Merchant of Venice' and Félicien David's symphonic ode 'The Desert.' These works were very creditably performed under the conductorship of Mr. W. J. Evans. The solos in 'The Desert' were sung by Mr. Watkin Phillips, and Mr. D. Clydach Thomas recited the ALTON. — The Excelsior Musical Society performed successfully Dr. C. A. E. Harriss's choric idyll 'Pan' and a miscellaneous selection at the Assembly Rooms on April 29. The following artists assisted: Miss Lena Nicholson, Mr. Frank Webster, Mr. Keith Seth-Smith, Miss Dorothy de Vin (violinist), and Miss Bessie Wenmoth (reciter). The orchestra was led by Miss K. E. Loveland, and Mr. J. T. Wenmoth conducted.

BANBURY. - Somervell's 'Power of Sound' and Cowen's 'John Gilpin' were performed by the Philharmonic Society in the Theatre Royal on April 28 with much success, under the conductorship of Mr. W. C. Luttman. The pianoforte accompaniment to the 'Power of Sound' was played by the composer, the other accompanists being Miss E. M. Wood and Mr. W. L. Luttman. Madame Shergold was the solo vocalist.

BARNES.—The fifth annual orchestral concert of Barnes Parish Church Choir took place on April 29 at Byfeld Hall, Barnes, when an excellent performance of Gounod's oratorio 'The Redemption' was given by band and chorus of 130 performers. The solo vocalists were Miss Edith Hays, Miss Florence Riden, Miss Winifred Hamilton, Mr. William Irons, Mr. Edgar Coyle and Mr. Ernest Minton. Great praise is due to the conductor, Mr. Vincent Stevens, for the excellent way in which he had trained the choir.

BELPER.—Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' was performed in the Public Hall on April 30, by a capable choir and orehestra of eighty performers, under the conductorship of Mr. J. B. Gough. The solo vocalists were Madame Edith Hayes, Mrs. Aspley, Mr. Franklin Thomas and Mr. Len Dickinson. In the miscellaneous selection the choir sang Webbe's 'When winds breathe soft and Jackson's 'Sisters of the sea.' Miss Olive Wolstenholme recited.

BOGNOR.—A successful performance of Gade's melodious cantata 'The Crusaders' was given by the Musical Society in the Assembly Rooms on May 11, under the conductorship of Mr. F. J. W. Crowe. The solo vocalists were Miss Florence Holderness, Mr. James Horncastle and Mr. Reginald Stewart. The orchestra (led by Mr. Baker) also played the 'Peer Gynt' suite and Schubert's 'Rosamunde' overture.

BRACKNELL.—The Choral Society gave its last concert of the season on May 14, when the programme consisted of Spohr's 'Last Judgment' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise.' Both works were well rendered by the choir and orchestra, the attack by the choir being specially good, reflecting credit on the conductor, Mr. F. C. Faulkner. The solo vocalists were Miss Ruth Freeman, Mrs. Johnson, Miss Metcalfe, Mr. Malcolm Boyle and Mr. Walter Dodds.

Bruton.—The thirteenth annual concert of the Choral Society was held on May 14, when Parry's 'Pied Piper' and Stanford's 'Last Post' were successfully performed. The solo vocalists were Miss Copner, Mr. James Davis and Mr. R. A. Grant. The programme included violin, violoncello and flute solos by Miss Lettice Coombs, Rev. E. Capel-Cure and Mr. Metford Rowe respectively. The Barcarolle from Sterndale Bennett's Pianoforte concerto in F minor was played by Mr. A. Clements, accompanied by the orchestra led by Miss B. Heginbotham.

BUCKLEY.—A performance of Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' and Barnett's 'Ancient Mariner' was given at the Central Hall, Buckley, on April 29, under the conductorship of Mr. Horace Haselden. The principal vocalists were Miss Eva Bailey, Miss L. Fairhurst, Mr. Spencer Thomas and Mr. Charles James.

BURSLEM.—The Choral Society gave a festival concert in the Town Hall on April 30, when Cowen's 'Rose Maiden' was performed, with the assistance of the North Staffordshire Orchestra, under the conductorship of Mr. N. E. Woodward. The choir, formed about twelve months since, displayed excellent tone and sang with enthusiasm, which reflected much credit on the conductor. The solo vocalists were Miss Lizzie Williams, Miss Maud Gibbons, Mr. Fred Jones and Mr. Samuel Barnes. The young conductor also appeared as a composer, being represented by a Pianoforte trio (Messrs. Robinson and Hulme and Miss Eva Nicklin) and a song, 'An April shower,' sung by Miss Williams.

BURY ST. EDMUNDS—The Athenæum Oratorio Choir gave a performance of 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast' and the 'Death of Minnehaha' in the Athenæum Hall on April 23. The choir displayed excellent spirit and enunciation, for which the training of the conductor, Mr. Oliver Lusher, deserves full recognition. The orchestra also did yeoman service, and the solo parts were ably interpreted by Miss Perceval Allen, Mr. Joseph Reed and Mr. David Brazell.

CHESHAM.—Macfarren's 'May Day' and Bridge's 'Flag of England' were performed satisfactorily by the Choral Society in the Town Hall on May 7, under the conductorship of Mr. W. H. London. The principal vocalist was Miss Agnes Parry, and Miss Alice Reynolds recited successfully.

CHICHESTER.—Two excellent concerts were given by the Chichester Orchestral Society in the Corn Exchange on April 23. The programmes included the overtures to Schubert's 'Rosamunde' and Wagner's 'Flying Dutchman,' Tchaikovsky's 'Casse noisette' suite and Elgar's concert overture 'Cockaigne.' The occasion was distinguished by the appearance of Lady Maud Warrender as vocalist, the Countess of Limerick as pianist, while the Countess of March shared the duties of accompanist with Mr. Theodore Flint. Songs by Mrs. Naper and harp solos by Miss Edith Scruby completed two very successful concerts. The orchestra was ably conducted by Mr. F. J. W. Crowe.

—The Musical Society gave a capital performance of Elgar's 'King Olaf' at its sixtieth concert, on May 4, in the Corn Exchange. The choir sang very intelligently, and the orchestra, led by Mr. A. G. Whitehead, played excellently. The solo vocalists were Miss Christine Bywater, Mr. Frank Webster and Mr. Arthur Wynn, and Dr. F. J. Read conducted.

CHIPPENHAM.—Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was given by the Chippenham Choral Society and Amateur Orchestra in the Parish Church on May 6. The soloists were Miss Winifred Marwood, Miss Ada Bennett, Mr. Abel Starkey and Mr. John Prout. Mrs. Dan Collen led the orchestra, and Mr. W. R. Pullein conducted.

CHIPSTEAD.—A concert was given by the Chevening Choral Society on May 5, when the programme included C. H. Lloyd's 'Song of Balder' and the part-songs 'From Oberon in Fairyland' (Stevens) and the 'Shepherd's farewell' (Smart). The two last-named pieces were those sung by the Society when they secured the challenge shield at the recent Tonbridge competition festival. Mr. W. K. Duckett conducted. During the evening Countess Stanhope presented to the members of the Society the medals gained by them at the festival referred to.

CIRENCESTER.—The chief features of the Choral Society's concert on April 23 were Coleridge-Taylor's 'Departure of Hiawatha' and Parry's 'Pied Piper.' These works were sung with much spirit and good expression, under the conductorship of Mr. A. H. Gibbons, excellent support being given by the orchestra, led by Mr. Bernard Carrodus. The solo vocalists were Miss Norah Newport, Mr. G. W. Brierley and Mr. Greeves Johnson. In the miscellaneous part of the programme the orchestra played Boieldieu's 'Dame Blanche' overture and the Entr'acte from Schubert's 'Rosamunde.'

COLCHESTER.—Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was successfully performed by the Musical Society in the Corn Exchange on April 30. The orchestra and choir numbered about 200, and the performance generally reflected much credit on Mr. Charles Osmond, the conductor. The principal solo parts were sung by Miss Mary Lund, Miss Lucie Johnstone, Mr. John Probert and Mr. Joseph Farrington.

CREWKERNE.—The recently formed Crewkerne and District Choral Society gave its first annual concert in the Town Hall on May 7. The Society, numbering one hundred performers, gave an excellent rendering of Bridge's cantata 'The Flag of England.' The programme also included selections from Cowen's 'Rose Maiden,' Suppé's overture 'Poet and Peasant' and part-songs by Alfred Gaul and Ferris Tozer. The soloists were Miss Maud Powne, Mr. Reginald Pine, and Mr. Reginald Stephens (violoncello). Miss Annie Tayler led the orchestra, and Mr. Edwin N. Tayler conducted.

DOVER.—A very successful concert was given on April 26 by the Choral Union, under the conductorship of Mr. H. J. Taylor. The programme included Stanford's 'The Revenge' and gems from the operas, &c. The solo vocalists were Miss Euneta Truscott, Miss Marie Stiven and Mr. Arthur Walenn.

EASTBOURNE.—A successful performance of Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' was given by the Devonshire Park Choral Society, in conjunction with the Duke of Devonshire's Private Orchestra, on May 19, numbering altogether over 200 performers. The solo parts were ably interpreted by Miss Marie Stuart, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. William Higley. Mr. James R. Dear conducted.—The first annual benefit concert of the above orchestra, conducted by Mr. P. Tas, took place on May 14, when Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' symphony, Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' suite, and other pieces were conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood, and the solo vocalist was Mrs. Henry J. Wood. During the past season the works of several British musicians have been performed at the fortnightly symphony concerts under the direction of their respective composers.

EPPING.—The Choral Society held its annual festival in the Town Hall on May 6. In the afternoon a miscellaneous concert was given, the most important item being Gade's 'Spring's message,' which, with several part-songs, was well rendered by the choir. The orchestra, led by Mr. W. Burnett Carter, played Cherubini's 'Medea' overture and Purcell's Suite for strings. In the evening Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was performed, the principal vocalists being Miss Stella Maris, Miss Lucie Johnstone, Mr. Bernard Turner and Mr. Robert Grier. Master Guy Kinnell took the part of the Youth and Mr. Henry Riding presided at the organ. The choir sang with anthusians choir sang with enthusiasm, and since the return of its former conductor, Mr. Donald Penrose, has exhibited a marked improvement.

FAREHAM.—The Philharmonic Society gave a performance of Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus' in the Connaught Drill Hall on May 6. The choir sang with spirit and good expression, and received able support from the orchestra. The solo vocalists were Madame Strathearn, Miss Loxley, Mr. Malcolm Boyle and Mr. Eaton Cooper. Mr. Eugene Spinney conducted.

FARNBOROUGH.—The Frimley and Farnborough Choral Society gave a miscellaneous concert on May 6, the programme including Parry's 'Pied Piper of Hamelin,' with Mr. Frederick Norcup and Mr. C. M. Waterlow as soloists. Miss Ethel Dyer also sang. The unaccompanied singing of the choir was excellent, and the playing of the orchestra (led by Mr. W. A. Easton) in Mendelssohn's 'Cornelius' march, the Minuet and Finale of Beethoven's first Symphony, and three Dances from 'Nell Gwyn' by Edward German was greatly appreciated. Mr. G. A. Stanton conducted, and Miss M. C. Williams was the accompanist.

GRAHAMSTOWN.—An interesting programme was presented by Mrs. Deane at her pianoforte recital in the Assembly Rooms on April 22. It included Bach's Organ toccata and fugue in D minor (arranged), Grieg's Sonata in E minor, Cesar Franck's Variations Symphoniques (the orchestral accompaniment played on a second pianoforte by Miss Cecilia Packman), and pieces by Chopin, Schumann, Brahms and Weber.

GRAVESEND. -- Stainer's 'Daughter of Jairus' was sung in the parish church on May 6, under the conductorship of Mr. Howard Moss, whose training of the choir merits special recognition. There was a small orchestra, and Mr. A. W. Moss presided at the organ. The solo parts were sung by Miss Bertha Acworth, Mr. Harold Colyer and Mr. Alec J. Mann. The cantata was preceded by an Adagio in F, composed by the conductor.

HITCHIN.--A concert was given by the Musical Society in the Town Hall on April 28, when Bridge's choral work
'The Ballad of the Clampherdown' was performed programme included two fantasias on 'Faust' and 'Lohengrin,' and Schubert's 'Marche Militaire,' under the conductorship of Mr. H. G. Moulden.

HORSHAM.—The Musical Society performed Haydn's 'Creation' (Parts 1 and 2) and Stanford's 'The Revenge' in the Assembly Rooms on May 5. The soloists in Haydn's work were Miss Nellie Dunford, Mr. Alexander Webster and Mr. Graham Smart, all of whom sang admirably. Mr. W. Jackson Byles was leader of a small but capable orchestra, and the chorus sang with enthusiasm. Mr. A. P. Whitaker conducted.

HOWDEN-LE-WEAR. - Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' was performed by the Choral Society on April 29, under the conductorship of Mr. H. M. Dixon. The choir also sang Pinsuti's 'In this hour of softened splendour,' and Bishop's 'Sleep, gentle lady.

HOYLAKE.—The Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. G. A. Jones, gave a concert in the Institute on April 28, when Van Bree's 'St. Cecilia's Day' and a miscellaneous selection were performed. The principal vocalists were Miss May Roberts, Miss Annie Lloyd and Master Leslie

The soloists were Miss Alice Hare, Miss Katrine St. Clair, Mr. Charles Child, Mr. Robert Carr and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint. The orchestra numbered thirty-one performers, and Mr. A. G. Whitehead conducted.

LLANELLY.—Parry's oratorio 'Judith' was successfully performed by the Siloh Choral Society in the Market Hall on May 5 before a very large audience. The choir sang throughout with intelligence and enthusiasm and received ample assistance from the orchestra, led by Mr. W. F. ample assistance from the orchestra, led by Mr. W. F. Hulley. The principal vocalists were Madame Sambrook-Jones, Miss Ida Kahn, Masters J. H. Williams and D. J. Lewis, Mr. David Hughes and Mr. Spencer Thomas. Mr. D. H. Lewis, who conducted, may be congratulated upon his enterprise in introducing this fine work to the locality.

MALPAS. — The performance of Sterndale Bennett's 'Woman of Samaria' in the Parish Church on April 30 was of special interest, as this was the first occasion that an oratorio had been given in the sacred edifice. The augmented choir of seventy voices, gathered from several places in the locality, was conducted by Mr. E. S. Giles. The organist was Mr. A. H. Robinson, and the solo parts were interpreted by Miss Charlton, Miss Gladys Horsford, Mr. Mordaunt and Mr. Jack.

NANTYGLO (MON.).—The Nonconformist Festival Choral Society gave two successful performances of Sullivan's oratorio 'The Light of the World' recently at the Market Hall, Brynmawr, and the Public Hall, Blaina. The choir numbered 180 singers, and the accompaniments were played by the Blaina Orchestral Society. Mr. W. T. Angell conducted.

NEWPORT (MON.).—Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' was performed at the second concert this season by the Choral Society in the Great Central Hall. The choir and orchestra, numbering 230 performers, gave a highly creditable rendering of the cantata, a special effect being made by the choir in the unaccompanied chorus 'O gladsome light' and in the choral did excellent work, special praise being merited by the Epilogue, while the orchestra was no less successful. The names of the solo vocalists, Miss Mabel Manson, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. John Harrison and Mr. Charles Tree, are sufficient guarantee for the excellence of their interpretations. Mr. Arthur E. Sims was the conductor.

NORTHAMPTON.—The Musical Society gave a performance of Handel's 'Israel in Egypt' on May 8 in the Corn Exchange. The choir, who sang with spirit, were ably assisted by the orchestra. The solo vocalists were Miss Kate Cherry, Miss Bertha Blaxley, Miss Dorothy Webster and Mr. Samuel Masters. The duet 'The Lord is a man of war' was sung by the whole of the basses. Mr. A. C. Tysoe presided at the organ, and Mr. C. J. King conducted.

PAINSWICK.—The Choral Society's annual concert was held on April 23, when Elgar's 'The Banner of St. George' formed a leading feature of the programme. Miss Gladys Honey was the soloist, and a large and capable orchestra supplemented the excellent efforts of the choir. Mr. A. W. Bruton, organist of Painswick Church, was the conductor. In the miscellaneous selection the glees and part-songs were 'My love dwelt in a northern land' (Elgar), 'Breathe so softly' (Donald), 'Waken, lords and ladies gay' (Brewer) and 'It was a lover and his lass' (Morley). Songs were contributed by Miss Honey and Mr. Ernest Dumayne.

READING.—The Free Church Choral Society gave a concert in the large Town Hall on May 13. The programme comprised Brahms's 'Song of Destiny,' Cowen's 'He giveth His beloved sleep,' and the English version of Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' (At the foot of the cross). The solo vocalists were Miss Annie Baxter, Miss Violet Oppenshaw, Mr. James Davis and Mr. Charles Knowles. Mr. A. W. Moss conducted.

REIGATE.—Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' was successfully performed by the Choral Society in the Public Hall on April 30, under the conductorship of Mr. Harold Macpherson. The choir sang with spirit, and there was a small orchestra, the solo parts being interpreted by Miss Pitt Soper, Miss Dora May, Mr. Hubert Baker and Mr. Dan Richards.

SEVENOAKS.—The seventeenth concert of the Choral and Orchestral Society took place in the Club Hall on May 6, when Mendelssohn's 'Athalie' was excellently performed under the conductorship of Mr. W. A. Taylor. The choir sang with spirit, and the solos were interpreted by Miss Flora Lambert, Miss Gypsy Andrews and Madame Bessie Grant, the recitations being given, as on so many other occasions, by Mr. Charles Fry. The orchestra (led by Mr. A. G. Whitehead), besides taking part in 'Athalie,' played the accompaniments to Max Bruch's Violin concerto in G minor, the solo part in which was rendered with much ability by Miss Phyllis Knight.

SHAFTESBURY.—The newly-formed Choral Society gave its first concert in the Market Hall on May 6, when Stanford's 'The Revenge' was the principal feature of the programme. In this work the choir, conducted by Mr. A. P. Inkpen, sang with intelligence and good expression. The accompaniments were sympathetically played by Miss Evelyn Inkpen (pianoforte) and the Rev. J. C. Blackett (organ). The Society should be encouraged to further efforts in the future.

SIDCUP.—The Musical Society concluded its twenty-eighth season in the Public Hall on May 4. Elgar's 'Black Knight' was the principal feature of the programme, which included Mozart's Symphony in D, Schumann's 'Genoveva' overture, Wieniawski's first Violin Concerto, and No. 5 of the Hungarian dances, Brahms-Joachim (solo, Mr. C. Carroll). The solo vocalists were Miss Gandy and Mr. Clifford Grout. Elgar's cantata received a highly creditable interpretation under the conductorship of Mr. Alfred E. Butterworth.

Southampton.—A very successful performance of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' was given by the Philharmonic Society in the Hartley Hall on April 29. The singing of the choir was particularly good, especially in the unaccompanied choruses, while the men's voices in the Pilgrim's choruses were quite satisfactory, and every commendation is due to the conductors—Mr. E. H. Moberly and Mr. G. Leake—for their care in preparation. There was a very capable orchestra, and the solo vocalists were Dixon conducted.

Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, Miss Ada Forrest, Mr. Ernest Pike and Mr. Dan Price. The cantata was preceded by the 'Carnaval Romain' overture of Berlioz.

SOUTHEND.—The Choral Society gave a performance of Elgar's 'Caractacus' in the Kursaal on May 5 with considerable success, mainly due to the skilful training of the choir by Mr. W. Whiteman, the conductor. The orchestra, which was augmented for the occasion by several London instrumentalists, did excellent work, and the solo parts were ably interpreted by Miss Esta d'Argo, Mr. Gwilym Richards, Mr. Thomas Rainger and Mr. Ernest Stanton.

SOUTHWICK.—The Southdown Choral Society gave a spirited performance of Stanford's 'The Revenge' in the Town Hall on April 30, conducted by Mr. G. Street. The miscellaneous selection included Wilbye's 'Flora gave me fairest flowers,' Pearsall's 'When Allen-a-Dale,' Smart's 'My true love hath my heart' by the choir. The overture to 'Figaro,' a Suite for strings and pianoforte by Celia Burleigh (conducted by the composer), and Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' march, were played by the orchestra.

STONY STRATFORD.—Cowen's 'St. John's Eve' was performed by the Musical Society in the Parish Room on April 30, under the conductorship of Mr. T. J. Tibbetts, to whom much credit is due for the excellent training of the choir. The orchestra, led by Mr. Arthur Tibbetts, was also satisfactory, and the solo vocalists were Miss Maude Richens, Miss Dorothy Webster, Mr. F. Dickinson and Mr. H. Stanley.

STOURPORT.—The Church Choral Society gave a concert in the Parish Room on May 6, when Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' was performed in its entirety. The well-balanced choir displayed dramatic power and delicacy of expression, their efforts being ably supported by a small orchestra. The solo parts were interpreted by Madame Anna Shergold, Mr. Frank Mullings and Mr. James Pugh. Mr. George Jackson conducted.

STOWMARKET.—Haydn's 'Creation' (Parts 1 and 2), followed by a miscellaneous selection, was performed by the Choral Society at the Institute Hall on April 27. The solo vocalists were the Hon. Mrs. Julian Clifford, Mr. Henry Beaumont and Mr. W. A. Peterkin. Mr. G. W. Bouttell conducted.

SUDBURY.—The Musical Society gave a performance of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' in the Drill Hall on May 6. The principal vocalists were Madame Ellen Verrinder, Miss Senta Laubach, Miss May Peters, Mr. Henry Beaumont and Mr. Samuel Bishop. The choir and orchestra (led by Mr. George Wilby) numbered 150 performers, and Mr. E. E. Vinnicombe conducted.

TROWBRIDGE —The third concert of the Philharmonic Society took place at the Town Hall on May 5, when Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and Bridge's 'Forging the anchor' were successfully performed, congratulations being due to the new conductor, Mr. C. T. Weigall, for his efforts in training the choir. The solo vocalists were Madame Anna Shergold, Miss Stribling, Mr. A. Starkey and Mr. John Prout. A capable orchestra was led by Signor Bertoncini.

Wellingborough. — 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast' and the 'Death of Minnehaha' were performed at the fourth annual concert of the All Saints' Choral Society on April 30, under the conductorship of the Rev. W. E. Terry. These works were capably rendered by the choir and orchestra, the latter also playing the 'Peer Gynt' suite. The concert concluded with the march and chorus from 'Tannhauser.'

WHETSTONE.—The St. Saviour's Choral and Orchestral Society performed Smart's 'Bride of Dunkerron' at the Church Hall, Alexandra Park on May II. The singing of the choir was commendable, and there was a capable orchestra. The solo parts were sung by Miss Grace Powell, Mr. James Davis and Mr. Felix Hotchkiss. Mr. George Hooper conducted.

WILTON-LE-WEAR.—A concert was given by the Choral Society on April 27, when Romberg's 'Lay of the Bell' was the chief feature of the programme. This was well performed by the choir and orchestra, with Miss Marie Fair, Mr. W. Brown and Mr. Isaac High as soloists. Mr. W. H. Divon conducted WIMBORNE.—The Choral Society gave its annual concert on May 7, when Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' and Parry's 'Pied Piper' were performed satisfactorily. The solo parts were well sung by Messrs. Bowden and Waitt. Mr. A. E. Wilshire conducted, and secured a very good rendering of his concert overture, which was well received.

WINGHAM (DOVER).—The Wingham and District Choral Society gave its last concert of the season on May 15, when Gade's 'Erl King's Daughter' and the following part-songs 'Pack clouds away' (Lloyd), 'The parting kiss' (Pinsuti) and 'The Heroes' (Cowen) were performed. The orchestra played 'March from Carmen' (Bizet), Mendelssohn's 'Son and Stranger' overture, the Bach-Gounod 'Meditation' and Moszkowski's 'Serenata.' Mrs. Roger Smith, Miss Hawkins and Messrs. Coltham and Noakes were the solo vocalists, and Mr. Alexander Reid conducted.

The principal vocalists were Miss Marie Titiens, Miss Lizzie Smith, Mr. Charles Till, Mr. Harry Egginton and Mr. Henry Beaumont. The choir and orchestra numbered 180 performers.

WOODFORD.—Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' was performed in the Lecture Hall on May 12 by the Woodford Congregational Church Choir, augmented to seventy voices. The precision and good intonation displayed by the choir, especially in the solo and chorus 'The night is calm and cloudless,' and in the choral epilogue, deserve recognition, indicating the careful training received from the conductor, Mr. Hubert Welton. The principal vocalists were Madame Windsor Locke, Miss Hilda Felstead, Mr. Henry Turnpenney, Mr. George Uttley and Mr. Ernest Davies. The accompaniments were played by Mrs. Julia R. Blazey (pianoforte) and Mr. Henry Riding (organ).

Answers to Correspondents.

R. S.—No left-handed professional player of the violin is known. On several occasions Messrs. Hill have fitted up instruments for left-handed performers, but they have always been for amateurs. One such—a naval officer—played the violin in that way, he having lost two fingers of his left-hand by a gunshot wound. In such instances a violin has to be specially arranged, the bass-bar and the post having to change places so that the strings can be set in reverse order.

R. M.—The only Musical Directory is that published by Messrs. Rudall, Carte & Co. We are quite sure that the publishers will gladly welcome any suggestion in the way of amplification as to Choral Societies, but such information as the names of secretaries of these organizations is not always easy to procure. As the conductor of a Choral Society is a much less changeable officer than the Secretary, applications for engagements could always be made to him.

ORGANIST AND CHANTER.—You ask, 'Is it possible to find a musical College or Society where a good organist and choirmaster could become an honorary member (yearly), and by paying his fee be allowed to wear the recognized gown at services?' To this habiliment interrogation the only answer is that no good organist should wish to dress himself up, even in a 'recognized gown,' by the mere payment of a fee.

O. W.—You will find valuable information upon the art of pianoforte teaching in Franklin Taylor's 'Technique and expression in pianoforte playing' (Novello). A thorough mastery of this book would form an important asset in your knowledge of the subject, especially in view of the examination for the Licentiateship of the Royal Academy of Music.

MARTE.—We can only suggest that you should advertise in order to obtain work as a copyist of music. You might, as you suggest, make known your desire to copy music by writing to some of 'the large music-warehouses,' but the result of such a proceeding we cannot attempt to prophesy.

DIAPASON.—A list of the organ and choral scholarships and exhibitions at the Universities is given on p. 53 of the 'Roll of the Union of Graduates in Music' (Musical News office, 4, Bell's Buildings, E.C.). These appointments are sometimes advertised in the columns of this journal.

- C. W. P.—The initial letter of 'Abraham' is often pronounced as a broad vowel after the Italian manner, as is the vowel in the word 'wind,' but it is much more sensible to sing these words as they are pronounced in ordinary speech.
- W. J. C.—You cannot do better than procure Mr. R. A. Streatfeild's book 'The Opera,' published by Messrs. George Routledge & Sons, at 6s. The third and revised edition contains the plot of Goring Thomas's 'Esmeralda' and of other operas by native composers.
- N. E.—The Harmonicon was issued from the year 1823 to 1833. The eleven volumes might be worth from twenty-five to thirty shillings according to the condition of the binding, therefore a single volume would not be of any intrinsic value.
- A. C.—Schubert's 'Rosamunde' music, in a cheap form, can be obtained from Messrs. Novello. Steady and persevering practice is the best way to improve sight-reading and reading from score having C cless.

HISTORICUS.—Hullah's two books on the history of music are rather out of date. The 'Oxford History of Music' (6 vols.) takes high rank, and may be consulted with profit to the student.

ORGANIST.—A competent organist has no need to look at the pedals. He can play feelingly without feeling for the keys. Do not get unnerved by the dicta of this or that oracle, but go steadily on.

L. R. A. M.—For pianoforte pieces after the style of Raff's 'La Fileuse,' try Liszt's 'Waldesrauschen' and Raff's 'Im Schilf.'

E. M. T.—The prisoners' chorus, 'Ah! che piacer!' in Beethoven's 'Fidelio' should be sung at about crotchet = 104.

J. S. W.—The titles of the organ pieces you send have a suspicious appearance of being fictitious in order to hoodwink a gullible public.

E. B.—Schubert's 'The Lord is my Shepherd' may be sung at about crotchet = 60.

THE OFFICE FOR THE HOLY COMMUNION

SET TO MUSIC BY

JOHN MERBECKE (A.D. 1550).

EDITED, WITH AN ACCOMPANIMENT FOR ORGAN

BASIL HARWOOD.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

This edition of Merbecke's Communion Service is based on Rimbault's reprint of 1871, after a careful comparison with a copy of the original edition of 1550 belonging to the Library of Christ Church, Oxford. The Plain Song is presented as nearly as possible in the form in which it first appeared, only such changes having been introduced as are required by the altered wording of our Prayer Book.

Price Sixpence.

MELODIOUS TECHNIQUE FOR THE PIANOFORTE

COMPOSED BY

J. A. O'NEILL.

IN Two Books: Price Two Shillings each, net.

These Pianoforte Studies have been highly praised by M. VLADIMIR DE PACHMANN, who has expressed his intention of playing some of them during his Recital Tour in the United States. His testimonial is published with the Work, which consists of Twelve Numbers, specially designed to develop power and skill in the fourth and fifth fingers. The importance of trying to equalize these weaker fingers with the stronger ones is unquestionable, as defective execution is more often traceable to this inequality of the fingers than to any other cause.

EXPRESSION

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful-to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of progress.

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et catera.

"The studies are quite as entertaining to the listener as they are serviceable to the performer."—Musical Opinion.

"Six clever and useful 'Octave Studies.' They are more than usually interesting."—Musical Standard.

"Excellent for practice."—Christian World.
"They afford a very complete course of study. The different umbers are tuneful and attractive, and the variety is great." numbers a
The Lady.

"Almost every branch of octave-playing is represented in these tuneful studies."—Church Bells.

"These studies are very melodious, and will make the irksome study of octaves quite interesting to the hard-working student.—Church Family Newspaper.

"Admirably adapted to formulate touch as well as style in this special branch of pianoforte technique."—Birmingham Daily Mail.
"Fitted for advanced students. For wrist work, No. 2 is excellent, and No. 6 is good enough for a concert piece. In all there is pretty equal work for both hands."—Birmingham Daily Post.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

EDITED, ARRANGED IN GROUPS, AND THE FINGERING REVISED AND SUPPLEMENTED

FRANKL TAYLOR

THIS Collection of Studies is intended to illustrate the various elements of a complete course of pianoforte techniques, and to provide students with the means of attacking and overcoming the different special difficulties which have to be encountered. With this view, the Studies have been arranged in groups, those in each group being placed in progressive order, and having reference to some one particular difficulty. The greater part of the studies themselves have been selected from the standard works of the most eminent Study-writers, and with these are included numerous others, which, though of equally great practical utility, have hitherto been less generally accessible.

SELECTED PIANOFORTE STUDIES

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THE present collection of studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most beneficial.

beneficial.

The Studies are grouped in two Sets, and are so arranged that the different Books in which they are contained may be taken in consecutive order, but pupils who are already further advanced than the elementary stage represented by Set I. may commence at once with Set II., which will be found to be complete in itself, and to illustrate all the essential elements of technique.

Where additional studies are desired, or studies on certain subjects which are not touched upon in this series, the larger collection, published under the title of "Progressive Studies" (from which the present examples have been selected), is of course available.

A Modern School for the Violin

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" will consist of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (8A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.-STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practics (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (18) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (28) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (88) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 8A and 8B, and so on.

PIECES.

In completion of the scheme of "A Modern School" a large number of Pieces will be published, in a form designed to fulfil the requirements of Violin Teachers and Students. In each number the Violin part will be furnished with complete Fingerings and Bowings, besides remarks as to the methods of rendering, &c.

SEVENTH AND REVISED EDITION.

A HANDBOOK EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

600 QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS

ERNEST A. DICKS,

Fellow of the Royal College of Organists.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found entremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, London, Dublin, Durham, and Edinburgh, and the Victoria University; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Music, and The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or commendation.

PREFACE TO THE SEVENTH EDITION.

PREFACE TO THE SEVENTH EDITION.

Through the kindness of Dr. E. H. Turpin the seventh edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music includes the latest type of Papers set by Trinity College of Music, London, in their scheme of Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge.

The work will also be found to have been considerably enlarged by the addition of fifty specimen questions, with answers. They have been designed for the most part after the manner of those set in the Theory Paper for the L.R.A.M. Diploma, and also that required by candidates for the Higher Practical Examinations held by Trinity College of Music, London. The author earnestly hopes that these additions will considerably enhance the value of the Handbook, and render it increasingly helpful to students.

THE CHOIRBOY'S GUIDE THE CATHEDRAL PSALTER

EDITED AND ARRANGED BY

ERNEST NEWTON.

This little book has been compiled mainly for the use of choirboys, and, therefore, nothing has been inserted but what is absolutely necessary for understanding the pointing of the Psalms as arranged in the Cathedral Psalter.

A certain amount of information has been given for the guidance of the Choirmaster, but the principal part of the book consists in the sets of exercises which have been arranged to lead the choirboys, step by step, through the various divisions of syllables that occur in the chanting of the Psalms.

After careful examination of the Cathedral Psalter, it has been found that there are exactly fifteen ways of dividing these syllables.

As the Recitation Notes are well within the compass of Alto, Tenor, and Bass voices, the book can be used with equal advantage by all members of a choir.

Price Ninepence.

ROYAL ROADS.

Pianists, like most other people, have been so often misled by so-called "royal roads" to success that they are apt to fall into the mistake of supposing that all such roads are fallacies. Strict investigation will, however, convince the most sceptical that in the matter of pianoforte technique the road to perfection, hitherto a dreary one, and on which the traveller was prone to get disheartened or lost, has now been levelled, straightened and made easy. The "royal road," as so many pupils term it, is the Macdonald Smith System - "From Brain to Keyboard." In the illustrated book "Light on Pianoforte Playing," which Mr. Macdonald Smith will send free to any pianist, the principles of his successful Postal Course are explained.

ROBIN OVERLEIGH

RECITAL, BECHSTEIN HALL,

MAY 13, 1908.

THE TIMES.

May 14, 1908.

Mr. Robin Overleigh, who gave a vocal recital yesterday Mr. Robin Overleigh, who gave a vocal recital yesterday in Bechstein Hall, has a baritone voice of charming quality, and he has evidently been well trained. . . . His old French songs were phrased and delivered with distinct musical ability; Caccini's "Amarilli" was a good example of sustained singing, and Carissimi's "Vittoria" was brilliantly sung. . . Walford Davies's "This ae nighte" was made duly impressive, however, and "I love the jocund dance" was so skilfully sung that it had to be repeated. A couple of songs by A. H. Brewer, Blow's "Self-Banished," and well-known songs by Rennett Arthur Somervell and and well-known songs by Bennett, Arthur Somervell, and Parry were also given, and the singer made a distinct success.

THE STANDARD.

May 14, 1908.

Praise is due to Mr. Robin Overleigh for presenting such an unconventional programme at his recital in Bechstein Hall yesterday afternoon, and also for his ability in sustaining the interest of a large audience to the very end. He uses his well-trained baritone voice effectively and with a good method of production. The tone is even throughout its range, and of a musical quality. . . . His singing of Caccini's "Amarilli" and Carissimi's "Vittoria" was expressive, and his phrasing artistic. His rendering of Brahms's songs was his best effort, as they were given with the dignified interpretation they need, and moreover it proved that he will be invaluable in oratorio. He was successful in two new songs by Dr. Herbert Brewer, sung with considerable charm of voice and style.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

May 14, 1908.

Mr. Overleigh, who has a good baritone voice, gave some interesting old examples by Lully, Martini, and others, and towards the end he was heard in some English songs, mostly modern. His efforts went to show that he has in him the makings of a good, capable singer.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

In the afternoon Mr. Robin Overleigh gave a concert at se same hall with much success. His baritone voice is the same hall with much success. essentially pleasing in quality, and although towards the end it sounded fatigued, its production did not appear to be at fault. He sings, too, with much sincerity, and made the fullest effect with Walford Davies's charming "Fear no more the heat o' the sun." His programme was wide in its range; it included Brahms's "Vier ernste Gesänge" and some early Italian aring besides other Facilia bearmiles. Italian arias, besides other English examples.

EXAMINATION QUESTIONS HOW TO WORK THEM

CUTHBERT HARRIS,

Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.

PREFACE.

PREFACE.

This Primer is intended more especially for those who purpose presenting themselves for examination in the theory of music. While the subjects dealt with may be found in all examination schemes for musical degrees and diplomas, it is hoped that the following chapters may prove useful more especially to candidates for the diplomas of the Royal College of Organists.

The object of this book is to stimulate and cultivate method in answering examination questions. Considerable experience as an examination "coach" has proved the success of the smethod, herein followed, of dissecting the questions, and—by dividing the points for consideration under several heads—thus directing the student's attention to one point at a time.

the student's attention to one point at a time.

THE MILTON TERCENTENARY.

JOHN MILTON, FATHER OF THE POET.

Poetry and Music! These twin sisters have most happily joined hands in the immortal verse of Milton and the undying strains of masters of The muse of the great poet has been wooed and won by Lawes, Handel, Arne, and, in at Christ Church, Oxford. Certain it is that he our own day, Hubert Parry, with results that are known and read of all men. There is yet another and important link which strengthens the tie a bigoted Roman Catholick, for abjuring the between the author of 'Blest pair of Sirens' and Popish tenets.' The disinherited youth then went able to take the superior education afforded at Christ Church, Oxford, at which seat of learning (according to John Aubrey, the chief contemporary authority), John Milton, the elder, was a student. As Mr. G. E. P. Arkwright says: * 'Perhaps it was at Oxford that he received a gold medal and chain from a Polish prince in reward for an In Nomine of forty parts, as related by his grandson Phillips on the authority of the poet; this prince, it has been conjectured, may have been Albertus Alasco, vaiode or palatine of Siradia, in Poland, who visited Oxford in 1583, and was entertained by the University with "learned recreations."

It has been suggested that Milton was a chorister that 'solemn music' which his genius inspired. to London to seek his fortune. Was not the father of John Milton a highlycultivated amateur musician? The answer to this question will presently be given; in the meantime there is full justification for special attention being called to the connection between Milton and Music in this tercentenary year of the poet's birth.

John Milton, senior, father of the poet, was born in the year 1562 or 1563. The place of his birth is not definitely known, but it was probably at the village of Stanton St. John, about five miles from Oxford, where his father, Richard Milton, was a prosperous yeoman who is stated to have been an under-ranger of Shotover Forest. The circumstances of Richard Milton may have been improved by his marriage with a lady supposed to have been

Arrived in the great city, he became apprenticed in 1595 to James Colborn, a member of the Worshipful Company of Scriveners. What was the occupation of a scrivener in the days of Good Queen Bess? We will allow Sir John Hawkins to supply the answer. He says: 'The word scrivener anciently signified a mere copyist. Chaucer rebukes his amanuensis by the name of Adam Scrivenere. The writing of deeds and charters, making servicebooks and copying manuscripts, was one of the employments of the regular clergy. After the dissolution of religious houses, the business of a scrivener became a lay profession; and a company of scriveners was incorporated, about which time they betook themselves to the writing of wills, leases, and such other assurances as required but little skill in the law to prepare.' Hawkins, in describing the business premises of a scrivener early in the 17th century, goes on to say: 'The furniture of a scrivener's shop was a sort of pew for the master, desks for the apprentices, and a bench for the clients to sit on till their turn came to be dispatched. The following jest may serve to explain the manner in which this business was carried on: A country fellow passing along Cheapside, stopped to look in at a scrivener's shop, and seeing no wares exposed to sale, asked the apprentice, the only person in it, what they sold there? "Loggerheads," answered the lad. "By my troth," says the countryman, "you must have a roaring trade then, for I see but one left in the shop."' And does not Shakespeare refer to scriveners in his 'Taming of the Shrew'? He says:

> We'll pass the business privately and well: Send for your daughter by your servant here: My boy shall fetch the scrivener presently.

In due time Milton started in business for himself, having been admitted a member of the Scriveners' Company on February 27, 1599. Dr. Garnett has said, 'such a calling of a scrivener offered excellent opportunities for investments'; but Milton combined strict integrity with frugality, living the simple life, whereby he came to possess 'a plentiful estate.' One of his possessions was the house in Bread Street, Cheapside, destroyed by the Great Fire. This habitation, where his genius son was born, being a shop, required a sign, as numbers to houses were then quite unknown. The musical scrivener chose the sign of 'The Spread Eagle,' either from the crest of such among the Miltons as had the right to bear arms, among whom he may have reckoned himself, or as the device of the Scriveners' Company, of which, bythe-way, he became the Master in 1634. By his marriage with Sarah Jeffrey, about the year 1600, he had six children. John, the poet and the third of this sextet, grew up between Anne, several years his senior, and a brother, Christopher, seven years younger than himself, who became a judge: the other three children died in infancy. Anne Milton married Edward Phillips, whose sons were Edward and John Phillips, the authors.

Having by assiduous attention to business made his fortune, John Milton the elder retired and settled at Horton, a village between Colnbrook and Datchet, situated in the south-eastern corner of Buckinghamshire. Here his wife died on April 3, 1637; and here also, under his father's roof, John Milton the younger spent five of the happiest years of his life in serious study, and in writing 'Comus,' 'Lycidas,' 'L'Allegro,' 'Il Penseroso,' and his beautiful 'Sonnet to a nightingale.' In August, 1641, John Milton the elder removed to Reading, where he remained until the taking of that town by the forces of Lord Essex, in April, 1643. For the remaining four years of his life he resided with his poet-son in London, first at Aldersgate Street—a house to which he had removed in 1640, beyond the city wall and then suburban enough to allow the poet a garden—and afterwards at Barbican, in a house demolished by a railway company in 1864. Here the old gentleman, 'being wholly retired to his rest and devotion, with the least trouble imaginable,' died early in March, 1647, at the advanced age of eighty-four. He retained his faculties up to the last, and Aubrey tells us that he could read without spectacles, while his poet son became blind when he was only forty-four years of age. His remains, like those of his illustrious son, are buried in the chancel of St. Giles's Church, Cripplegate, the burial entry reading:

John Milton. Gentleman. 15.

As a composer, the elder Milton's chief claim to distinction is the fact that he was one of the 'divers several aucthors' who contributed to 'The Triumphs of Oriana,' that wonderful collection of madrigals written in honour of Queen Elizabeth and printed in 1601. Milton set, for six voices, the madrigal 'Fair Orian in the morn' (which forms one of the extra supplements to the present issue of The Musical Times). Its quaint words, by an anonymous author, may be quoted:

Fair Orian in the morn
Before the day was born,
With velvet steps on ground,
Which made nor print nor sound,
Would see her Nymphs abed.
What lives those ladies led!
The roses blushing said,—
'O stay, thou shepherd's maid:'
And on a sudden all,
They rose and heard her call.
Then sang those Shepherds and Nymphs of Diana:

He also contributed to an important collection of music dedicated to 'The High and Mightie Charles, Prince of Great Brittaine' and entitled:

' Long live fair Oriana.'

Milton harmonized two tunes for Ravenscrost's appeared (melody only) in the Scottish Psalter of 'Psalter' (1621), one named 'Norwich' and the other the well-known common-metre tune 'York,' so first designated by Ravenscroft. As John Milton's name is placed against 'York' in Ravenscroft's Psalter, it has been too readily assumed that he composed the tune, whereas he only harmonized it. As a matter of fact, 'York' first 1760) says 'York' was so well known that 'within memory half the nurses in England were used to sing it by way of lullaby; and the chimes of many country churches have played it six or eight times in four and twenty hours from time immemorial.'

The British Museum possesses six other compositions (Add. MSS. 29,372-29,377), by John Milton, the titles of which are subjoined:

- * When David heard that Absolon was slaine ' (à 5).
- 'O woe is me for thee, my brother Jonathan' (\hat{a} 5).
- *' I am the resurrection and the Life' (à 5).
- ' How doth the holy City remaine solitary' (\hat{a} 6).
- 'She weepeth continually' (à 6).
- 'Precamur sancte Domine' (à 6).

* These have been printed by Mr. G. E. P. Arkwright in his 'The Old English Edition,' No. xxii. (Joseph Williams, 1900.) This volume also contains reprints of 'Thou God of might,' 'O Lord, behold my miseries,' 'O had I wings,' and 'If that a sinner's sighs,' from Leighton's 'The Teares' (1614), referred to above.

At Christ Church, Oxford, there are an anthem for four voices, entitled 'If ye love me,' and five Fancies, three in five and two in six parts. Dean of Christ Church, who has kindly examined these Milton MSS. for the purposes of this article, writes concerning them: 'The anthem "If ye love me" is a short composition in four parts, and is in full score. There are no other words but those which stand at the beginning, "If ye love me." We have the parts of the "Fancies" perfect. In the book they are ascribed to "Mr. Melton." the case of four of them there is nothing to show that they are not instrumental. But the tenor part has the following very curious words written out in full in connection with the first of the six-part compositions, and this is not called in the MS. a "Fancy," but an "In te nomine":

"If that a siner siges, sent from a soule oprest Maye pearce the firmement and mount the Throane Wheare greate Jehovah sittes, the God of rest Then heare O Lord the sad tune of my mone. O gratious God whose goodness gives mee light, Receave my teares and prayeres in Thy sight.'

To the Dean's communication may be added that, while the above words begin the same as Milton's setting of 'If that a sinner's sigh' in Leighton's 'Teares,' they differ after the first line; moreover, they do not agree with the text of 'If that a sinner's sighs,' given in Byrd's 'Psalmes' (1588) and Dowland's 'A Pilgrimes Solace' (1612).

With filial affection John Milton, the poet, pays a high tribute to his father's gifts in his 'Ad Patrem,' a Latin poem of 120 lines. portion (lines 56-66) which specially refers to the musicianship of the elder Milton, is thus given, in an English translation, by Burney (' History of Music,' iii., 135):

Nor blame, Oh much lov'd fire! the sacred Nine, Who thee have honour'd with such gifts divine; Who taught thee how to charm the list'ning throng, With all the sweetness of a siren's song; Blending such tones as ev'ry breast inflame, And made thee heir to great Arion's fame. By blood united, and by kindred arts, On each Apollo his refulgence darts: To thee points out the magic pow'r of sound; To me, the mazes of poetic ground; And foster'd thus, by his parental care, the Seventh, Christ's College, Cambridge, can specification: claim many distinguished alumni-such as Henry More, Francis Quarles, John Cleveland, Leland (the antiquary), William Paley, Charles Darwin, Charles Stuart Calverley, John Robert Seeley, William Robertson Smith, and the hero of the hour, John Milton. On the north side of the first court is the Chapel (see the illustration on p. 439). An oriel in the south wall opens into a room in the Master's Lodge, called the Prayer Room, which enabled the Foundress to hear the chapel service without leaving her The above specification is from the house.

II. THE MILTON EXHIBITION AT CHRIST'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

As far back as the year 1530 the College accounts contain references to the repairs of an organ in the Chapel. Nearly two hundred years Re-founded in 1505 by Lady Margaret Beaufort, later, in 1706, Father Smith erected a two-manual Countess of Richmond, mother of King Henry organ of ten stops, according to the following organ-book in the handwriting of the late

Dr. E. J. Hopkins (now in the possession of the present writer), and contains the following note by him:

The organ in this Chapel stands in an organ chamber built on the north side, near to the altar, and elevated considerably above the floor of the Chapel. The chamber is designed with much judgment. It is not made to fit the organ like a great coat, but allows some space between the wall and the case down both sides; and the ceiling slopes up slightly from back to front. The front is parallel with the side of the Chapel.

In 'The Organ: its history and construction,' Rimbault, writing in 1855, says, sub voce Father Smith: 'The last three organs remain in nearly their original state; they have been disused for more than half a century,' the reference being to the instruments in the Chapels of Pembroke, Emmanuel, and Christ's Colleges, Cambridge. Professor Darwin, in his biography of his distinguished father (Chapter v., 'Cambridge life': 1828-1831) says: 'I have heard my father tell how at evening chapel the Dean used to read alternate verses of the Psalms, without making even a admitted a pensioner of Christ's College, February pretence of waiting for the congregation to take 12, 1625, according to the Admission Book, of And when the Lesson was a lengthy which a facsimile of the entry is subjoined:

one, he would rise and go on with the Canticles after the scholar had read fifteen or twenty verses.' A writer in The Parish Choir, under date of March 14, 1848, gives a hardly less deplorable account of the services at Christ's College. He says: 'There is some talk of reviving the choral service in this chapel, but I do not think any steps have been taken at present. Of the organ, very little more than the case remains. There is an endowment for a choir, but it is at present perverted to other uses, which is the case also at Emmanuel.' Now all this is changed, and the services are models of what they should be. Among former organists of the College, who have helped to improve the services musically, have been Dr. Hugh Blair and Dr. H. P. Allen, while the present holder of the office, Mr. J. F. Chubb, worthily carries on the traditions of recent years.

To return to John Milton, the poet. on December 9, 1608, at the sign of 'The Spread Eagle,' Bread Street, London, where his father carried on the business of a scrivener, he was

He resided in the College apparently without a one whose pre-eminence among those reared in break until he was admitted to the M.A. degree, on July 3, 1632. The Master (Dr. John Peile, author of the 'History of Christ's College'), in his Preface to the Milton Exhibition Catalogue, says: 'Tradition assigns to him rooms on the first floor of the staircase N on the left side of the First Court as you enter by the great gateway.' (See the illustration on p. 437.) To quote further from the Master's foreword: 'Each year we hold our domestic commemoration of all our benefactors and worthies. This year [1908] gives us an opportunity, which we welcome, not only of dwelling upon our connexion with John Miltonof asking others to join us in a commemoration of forms one of our extra supplements. Even relics this College can be questioned in favour of none save perhaps of Charles Darwin. We ask all to enjoy with us the sight of portraits, of books, of other objects which have interest by their relation to Milton.' The Master's invitation is one that should be accepted by those who would enjoy a quiet hour among the rich store of Miltoniana gathered together within the College walls.

The Exhibition—which will remain open till the 11th of this month—is admirably displayed in the College Library. It consists of a large collection of books, some manuscripts, and many portraits of the poet, including the boy-portrait by Cornelius "for we were nursed upon the self same hill"—but | Janssen, the Dutch painter, a photograph of which find a place—Milton's pen-case and snuff-box! With regard to the books exhibited, the Cambridge Review of June 10 (the 'May Week' number) may be quoted:

First the 'Comus' of last year, in the new Cambridge type, with the two sorts of 'h' used indiscriminately; the productions of the Astolat, Essex House, Doves and Ashendene presses; the Cambridge reproduction of the MS. of the Minor Poems; the large 'Paradise Lost,' with Strang's edition of 1835; the Blake illustrations in Sir E. Brydges's edition of 1835; the Blake illustrations of 1827, and those of Bartolozzi in 1792; the adaptation of 'Comus' in 1791, and its performance in 1787 and 1774; and the bibliographically interesting Baskerville editions of 1758-60.

A most interesting case contains Bentley's edition of 'Paradise Lost,' together with the answers and criticisms it aroused in 1732 and 1733; and then the long series from the 14th back to the first edition of the poem, of this latter six states of the title-page are shown. There is the first edition of 'Paradise Regained' (1671); the collected poems of 1645, the 'Lycidas,' in the Cambridge collection of memorial verses on the death of Edward King in 1638, together with the little piece of corrected proof found by Mr. Burrell in a binding in the University Library—' Comus,' printed in 1637, though it was written and acted three years earlier; and finally the anonymous lines in the second folio of Shakespeare. As to the prose works, the collection is equally complete, containing the editiones principes of all the famous tracts; the 'Pro populo Anglicano Defensio,' with Salmasius's original book; the 'Iconoclastes,' the 'Areopagitica,' and the 'Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce.

The same article thus refers to the splendid collection of portraits exhibited:

Mention has already been made of the Janssen portrait of the poet at the age of ten. Of the Onslow portrait, representing Milton at the age of an undergraduate, there are many prints, and particular mention must be made of a miniature exhibited by Mr. Shipley, which probably served as Houbraken's model, for the engraver was not able to come to England, and there is no record that the Onslow portrait ever went to Amsterdam. Then there is Marshall's portrait, confessedly a bad likeness, in the 1645 edition of the poems, Milton was naturally dissatisfied with it, as his Greek epigram beneath it shows; and then the Faithorne engraving of 1670, representing the poet in mature age; the Bayfordbury portrait, formerly in the hands of Tonson, the printer. Of particular interest is Dr. Williamson's collection of pretended portraits, mostly without the vaguest resemblance to the true type. Among them there is a new portrait, now in Dr. Williamson's possession, which may, perhaps, lay greater claim than the rest to authenticity, for the mother of its late owner was a Miss Woodcock, of the family from which Milton took his second wife. If its genuineness could be proved it would be of great value as representing the poet at a time of life (about 48) wholly unrepresented by any other portrait.

Of supreme musical importance in this interesting Exhibition is a MS. volume, lent by the Rev. Dr. H. R. Cooper Smith, rector of Tilehurst, near Reading. It contains 200 songs composed by Henry Lawes, including those of 'Comus,' all of them, on the authority of Mr. Barclay Squire, being in the handwriting of the composer. The Written at Wilton and in London. C. Hubert H. Parry'—a masterpiece that has lost none of its production by the Bach Choir, for which organization it was written, on May 17, 1887. In the same case is the autograph score of Sir Charles Stanford's Symphony No. 5, in D major (Op. 56), 'L' Allegro ed il Penseroso,' completed in

'Comus' songs are headed: 'The 5 songs following were sett for A Maske presented at Ludlo Castle before ye Earle of Bridgwater, Lorde President of ye Marches. October, 1634.'

To a song 'Come from the dungeon to the throne' is appended the following note:

This songe was sung in A play cald ye Royall Slave, written by Mr. William Cartwright, presented by the Scollers of Christ Church in Oxford before their Majesty es. 1636.

The next song, 'Dispaires Banquet—Com heavye soules,' has a note which reads:

this Songe was sunge in A play cald ye passons written by Mr. William Strowd, presented by ye Schollers of Christ-church before their Majestyes, 1636.

A pencil note to the song 'Will you know my mistris face?' states:

Mr. Gretorex (sic) has added 5 parts to this and the same was done at the Ancient Concert as a Madrigal for 6 voices on the 6th night under the Direction of Lord Chesterfield Wednesday March 11th, 1801.

Mr. Barclay Squire is of opinion that these songs of Henry Lawes are copies made by him for his own use, and that he had them bound up together: some of them are printed in 17th century collections of songs, such as Lawes's 'Ayres and Dialogues,' &c. In regard to the history of this Lawes MS. volume, its present owner, the Rev. Dr. H. R. Cooper Smith, informs us that it once belonged to William Gostling, the antiquary, whose 'From him,' he says, book-plate is in the book. 'I believe it passed either to Dr. William or Dr. Philip Hayes, and was sold at Dr. Hayes's death in 1797. (You will find an allusion to it in Todd's edition of "Comus," 1808.) I believe it was purchased at Dr. P. Hayes's sale by my great-grandfather, Robert Smith, of St. Paul's Churchyard. At any rate, he has made a note in the volume to the effect that Dr. Hayes valued it at £50. It was in Robert Smith's possession in 1802: his book-plate is in it, and that of his friend Stephen Groombridge. Robert Smith died in 1810, and through various members of my family the volume came into my possession in 1882. The book was exhibited at the Loan Collection, Inventions Exhibition, Royal Albert Hall, in 1885, but received too late to be catalogued: it was also shown at the Musicians' Company's Exhibition, held at Fishmongers' Hall in 1904.

In close proximity to the above mentioned volume is 'The Bridgewater Manuscript of Comus,' lent by the Earl of Ellesmere and said to be in the handwriting of Henry Lawes. Other MSS. are the autograph full score of Sir Hubert Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens,' lent by Trinity College, and bearing the superscription: 'Finished, Jan. 7, 1887. Written at Wilton and in London. C. Hubert H. Parry'—a masterpiece that has lost none of its popularity since its production by the Bach Choir, for which organization it was written, on May 17, 1887. In the same case is the autograph score of Sir Charles Stanford's Symphony No. 5, in D major (Op. 56), 'L' Allegro ed il Penseroso,' completed in June, 1894, and dedicated 'to the Philharmonic Society and its conductor Sir A. C. Mackenzie,' the work being first performed at the Philharmonic Society's concert of March 20, 1895.

The printed music includes Dr. Arne's 'Musick in the Masque of 'Comus,' brought out at Drury Lane Theatre in 1738, lent by Mr. Edward J.

Dent, and entitled:

The | Musick | in the | Masque | of | Comus. | Written by Milton. | As it was Perform'd at the Theatre-Royal in Drury-Lane. | Composed by | THOMAS AUGUSTINE ARNE. | Opera prima.

London; | Printed by William Smith, at Corelli's Head, near St. Clement's Church in the Strand; and sold | by the Author, at his Lodgings, at Mr. West's, a Frame-Maker, in Duke-street, by Lincoln's- | Inn-Fields; and at the Musick-Shops in London and Westminster.

There is also a pasticcio 'Comus,' consisting of music by Arne and Handel with additions by Bishop. Dr. Mann lends an original word-book of 'Samson' (London: 1743), 'set to music by George Frederick Handel,' and there is a Cambridge printed libretto of the same oratorio dated 1782. Another feature of musical interest is the copy of Dr. Johnson's 'Lives of the poets,' which the great lexicographer presented to the gifted daughter of Dr. Charles Burney, and bearing the inscription: 'To Miss Frances Burney from the author.'

It only remains to be said that the catalogue of this excellent Milton Exhibition at Christ's College, Cambridge, has been most attractively got up. Its chief contributors are Dr. G. C. Williamson, who treats of the portraits and the early editions of the poems, and Mr. Charles Sayle, who has furnished an appendix on the various editions of the poet's works and on books about Milton to be found at Cambridge. Various well-produced portraits and facsimiles add to the value of a publication which is worthy of the event which has called it forth, an Exhibition upon the success of which all concerned in its promotion are to be warmly congratulated.

To Mr. Passmore Edwards, the thanks of the writer are specially due for his kindness in permitting his boy-portrait of John Milton, the poet, to be photographed expressly for this article and, in all probability, for the first time.

Milton and the musical settings of his poems will form the next instalment of these papers during this tercentenary year of the poet's birth.

F. G. E.

Why is it that people with imperfect acquirements are often so much more enthusiastic than those who know more?—SIR GEORGE GROVE.

(Written, in pencil, on the back of his copy of the word-book of the Crystal Palace Saturday Concert, December 12, 1868.) sol, re, ut.' These somewhat weird names were

THE EVOLUTION OF CLEF SIGNATURES.

The growth of the stave and the evolution of clef signatures are matters which do not appear to have greatly attracted the attention of the average musician. In regard to the evolution of those eccentric signs which indicate clefs, I know of nothing that either adequately, or even inadequately, deals with the subject. Dictionaries of music and text-books tell us, all too briefly, that the wild convolution which marks the G clef is merely a corruption of a Gothic letter (F; and that probably the other signs are similarly derived from the letters F and C. But, so far as I am aware, no attempt has hitherto been made scientifically to trace the stages of their evolution.

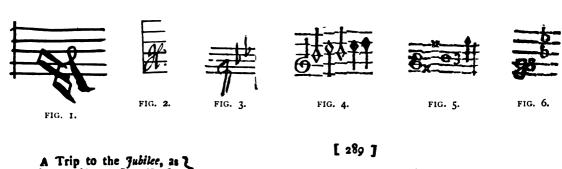

In the first place, let me totally deny that the sign is derived from a Gothic &; moreover, it is absolutely certain that the present forms of the bass and tenor clef signatures do not readily suggest their real origin.

An examination of old music reveals the fact that the G clef was not greatly in use before the 15th and 16th centuries. The C clef is that most frequently found, this being followed by the F clef, both singly and in conjunction with it. The reason for the general use of the C clef in early music is naturally due to the fact that at the birth of the stave the C line was the original single line drawn above the words to be vocalised, and used as a point from whence, in regard to interval, the other notes were calculated. Other stave lines followed in due course. Now that the bass and treble clefs are mainly used, strangely enough the C clef line is the one that is so often absent. Early vocal music—especially that of the Church, where the range was limited—frequently extended to no more than four lines: 'Summer is i cumen in,' exceptional in many ways, is noted on a six-line stave. In this class of early music the C clef was placed on any line in order to avoid leger-lines, then almost unknown.

When instrumental music, other than that written in viol or lute tablature, began to be in written evidence, two separate staves were employed. Virginal music was noted on two staves of six lines each, the G clef being placed on the third line counting upwards, and the F clef on the third line counting downwards. Thus the tenor C line was repeated. Down to the end of the 17th century this pair of six-line staves was in use for all harpsichord and spinet music, including the little book of Henry Purcell's 'Lessons' issued in 1696. These details, and some others, regarding the Gamut cannot well be avoided in any explanation of the evolution of clef signatures.

The Gamut assigned to every note a particular name, or rather a combined designation, viz.: (1) the alphabetical name; (2) the vocal sound for it; and (3) its relative pitch. Thus are derived such nomenclature as 'F, fa, ut'; 'A, la, mi, re'; 'G, sol, re, ut.' These somewhat weird names were sufficient to identify any particular note and its pitch, so far as pitch was a settled matter, and therefore it was natural that as only a section of the great stave was used, one particular note of the Gamut should be so placed as to identify note and pitch, from which other notes could be reckoned. By common usage 'G, sol, re, ut' was employed on the treble stave, and this by abbreviation became G. s, and was placed on its particular line. From the combination of these two letters, gradually corrupted by careless transcription, the present sign (was evolved.

As the Gamut nomenclature fell into disuse the added 'Sol, re, ut' appended to the G became unknown, with the result that the s sign became more or less a wild scribble. It must be remembered, however, that in a few early instances the G alone was used, and also that where the letter s was employed it was generally in its long-shaped form, which even in comparatively recent times was used by ladies who retained the old-fashioned style letter G is on the line, while the long s, indicating of handwriting.

present sign has been evolved:

Occasional Hotes.

To interest his singers at rehearsals should be the aim of every choral conductor. Time devoted to deepening the impressions of the inner meaning of the music studied is well spent. The history and poetic import of a work and the idiom of its composer are among the features that should be pointed out and emphasised. This can be done during intervals which, while resting the voices, will result in a more intelligent grasp of the music and at the same time afford a pleasant relief from the more technical aspect of the practice. Moreover, such 'little talks,' if brightly and unpedantically expressed, will act as a loadstone to the rehearsals, so much so as to cause each singer to say: 'I would not miss the practice for anything, if I could possibly help it.' What better investment could be offered to a conductor?

The above remarks—the practical outcome of long experience—are prompted by the receipt of a Cambridge booklet, daintily bound in the light blue colour of the University and published by Messrs. Bowes & Bowes. Its title is 'John Sebastian Bach's Mass in B minor, in Cambridge, 1908,' while its fifty-six pages consist of the three following papers:

i., by Mr. Sedley Taylor,

On the circumstances under which Bach composed his B minor Mass.'

ii., by Dr. Alan Gray,
'On the structure of that work.'

iii., by Mr. Sedley Taylor,
'On the revival of Bach's choral works after nearly a century of apparent extinction.'

These three papers—'little talks'—were read at a meeting of the Cambridge University Musical Society (of which Dr. Alan Gray is the conductor) on the day previous to the first complete performance of Bach's masterpiece by the Society (March 10, 1908). All of them are commendably short and are brightly written; even the second, which is of an analytical nature, is free from ponderous periods of technical terminology. Here we have just the kind of thing which a choir should know in order to get at the inner meaning of a work, and infuse it with that life which the dry bones of mere technicalities can never give.

In the third paper, Mr. Sedley Taylor-one of the oldest and most highly esteemed amateurs of the University—in referring to the progress of Bach's music in England, omits to mention, doubtless unintentionally, the name of Samuel Wesley, one of the earliest pioneers of the great Cantor's works in this country. As was pointed out in the articles on Bach's 'Music in England' (THE MUSICAL TIMES, September-December, 1896), Wesley publicly performed one of the motets nearly a hundred years ago. The reference may be repeated, as reprinted in this journal from the newspapers of the day:

'New Rooms, Hanover Square. Mr. Samuel Wesley's Musical Morning Party on Saturday next, June 3, when will be performed several compositions of Sebastian Bach, among which a grand sacred Motetto for five voices.' This Motetto would be 'Jesu, meine Freude' ('Jesu, Priceless Treasure,' in Messrs. Novello's Octavo Edition). The work was thus sung in England not so very long after it had been published (in 1803) by Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel, at Leipzig. This was probably the earliest performance of Bach's vocal music in England, although Dr. Gauntlett claimed that honour at one of his musical lectures given at the London Institution nearly thirty years later.

Mr. Taylor refers to an 'unfortunately short-lived, little Bach Society' at Cambridge which had a brief existence in his undergraduate days more than fifty years ago. He says that the Society

Executed one probably unprecedented feat—the performance at a single concert of jour of his [Bach's] concertos for two, or for three, pianofortes. Among the playing members of this Society of enthusiasts were, besides those already named [Rev. J. R. Lunn, Rev. H. T. Armfield, and Mr. Taylor himself], Mr. Pendlebury, Fellow of St. John's, or whom we once the admirable liberary of full-scores at the to whom we owe the admirable library of full-scores at the Fitzwilliam Museum, Mr. Percy Bunting, now Editor of the Contemporary Review, and Mr. C. J. E. Smith, of St. John's, colloquially known as 'Pianoforte Smith,' who was afterwards a clerical Fellow of his College and promoted the cause of good music as an assistant-master at Eton and

In amplification of Mr. Taylor's autobiographical note, we are able to say that the concert above referred to was noticed in THE MUSICAL TIMES of October, 1857, in the following words:

CAMBRIDGE. On Thursday, September 8, a private performance of some of the finest works of the great John Sebastian Bach was given by the Amateur Bach Society in this University.

The Musical World of September 26, 1857, gives the programme in an account of the concert:

On Thursday evening the Amateur Bach Society, in this University, gave a private performance of some of the works of the great master, which seemed to afford great pleasure to a somewhat numerous audience. The following was the programme:

PART I.—Concerto in C major for three pianofortes and orchestra; Toccata, with fugue in C minor, pianoforte; Tenor solo and chorus from the 'Passionsmusik'; Concerto in C minor for two pianofortes and orchestra.

PART II.—Concerto in D minor for three pianofortes and orchestra; Solo (tenor) from the 'Kirchen Cantata'; Concerto in C major for two pianofortes and orchestra.

What a splendid programme! But why is there not more information available concerning this Cambridge Bach Society of half-a-century ago? In the forthcoming volume of the new edition of 'Grove' the subject may, perhaps, be referred to under 'University Musical Societies.' In the meantime we hope that Mr. Sedley Taylor and any other surviving members of that Bachist fraternity at the University will not fail to give the fullest particulars of this early and praiseworthy effort to propagate the music of John Sebastian Bach at Cambridge.

Dr. W. H. Cummings has been presented with an illuminated album and an address, together with a cheque for 500 guineas, which has been subscribed to in order to defray in part the heavy costs incurred by him in defending a recent action in the law courts. The ceremony took place at the Mansion House on June 23, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor, who spoke in highly appreciative terms of the splendid work that Dr. Cummings had done at the Guildhall School of Music. Owing to the regretted absence, through illness, of Sir Frederick Bridge, the presentation of the album and address-which contained the signatures of the subscribers to the testimonialwas made by Professor Prout, and the cheque was handed to Dr. Cummings by Sir Walter Parratt. In the evening of the same day a banquet in honour of the esteemed Principal of the Guildhall School of Music was held at De Keyser's Royal Hotel, Professor Prout in the chair, and passed off most successfully.

In our May issue we referred to the strange impasse connected with the Lower Rhenish Musical Festival, due to be held at Düsseldorf at Whitsuntide last; how the Municipal conductor, Prof. Julius Buths, resigned because the Town Council insisted upon arranging the programme and selecting the artists without allowing him, the festival conductor, to have any voice in these vital matters; and how Prof. Buths's choir, in supporting him, refused, under these circumstances, to take part in any festival. We result? No festival was held this year. What is the Thus the first break since 1859 was made in the sequence of these famous music-makings. Started in 1818, under Burgmüller, at Düsseldorf, and brought by Mendelssohn to their most brilliant period in the thirties and forties of last century, these festivals had, on more than one occasion, to be discontinued pro tem., the longest break commencing with the troublous revolutionary year of 1848, after which they were not resumed until 1851 at Aachen (Aix la Chapelle) under Lindpaintner.

It is doubtful if, after this year's fiasco, these festivals will ever again be revived, for there can be little doubt that in the Regierungsbezirk of Düsseldorf, the most densely populated district of the Continent, they have lost their raison dêtre. Towns such as Elberfeld, Barmen, Duisburg, Dortmund, Essen, Crefeld, Gladbach, and others, which used to look up to neighbouring Düsseldorf as an important Art centre and to its festivals as musical events of the first rank, have all grown into big and prosperous hives of industry, and moreover they are well able to hold their own in musical matters against the pleasant 'Festival' concerts and 'Festival' garden city. operatic performances are taking place in bewildering profusion all over Germany, wherever town councils are awake to the importance of such entertainments, as magnets wherewith to draw strangers to their cities and money into the pockets of the citizens. How can Düsseldorf fail to suffer when so many counterattractions are offered elsewhere? Besides, the subscription concerts given annually by the local Musikverein are, or were, under the direction of Prof. Buths, on a sufficiently elaborate scale, the performances of adequate excellence, and the soloists of the requisite distinction to lift them to the level and to give them the dignity of 'festival' performances. Little wonder that under these conditions the thrifty burghers declined to pay greatly increased prices for the pleasure of hearing a somewhat larger orchestra. If the Lower Rhenish Festivals are doomed, another link with the great musical past of Germany will be severed. The last pleasant incident in connection with their long and glorious history may prove to be embodied in the news that the Dusseldorf Town Council have unanimously decided to grant their late conductor, Prof. Buths, the pension which it was feared he had forfeited by his resignation at a crucial moment. This is only a just recognition of services so unsparingly rendered to the cause of music in Düsseldorf by Prof. Buths.

The custom of London music publishers collecting music for their customers from different firms often produces amusing results in the matter of titles. The following from a type-written list of pieces has been brought under our notice:

Lonely up here over the mountains. Anthem.

A pleasant perversion of 'Lovely appear over the mountain.'

Mr. William Cowan, of Edinburgh, writes as follows on the article 'Psalter' in the new edition of 'Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' vol. iii.: 'The fourth volume of the new edition of "Grove's Dictionary" contains at the end a number of "Addenda et Corrigenda for vol. iii." It is satisfactory to find that these include a large proportion of the corrections noted by me in THE MUSICAL TIMES for July last. There are several minor inaccuracies and inadequate statements to which I called attention, and of which no notice has been taken, but apart from these the following errors still remain uncorrected:

P. 834, col. 2.—The date of the 1556 book is on the first

P. 835, col. 2.—Tunes from the French psalter added in 1560. The 130th should be omitted, having appeard in 1556. The six tunes from the French are the 50th, 121st, 124th, 127th and 129th set to the same psalms in both books, and the French 107th set to the English 120th.

P. 837, col. 1.—In the comparison of the contents of the 1562 book with previous editions, the 1558 edition is still ignored. The nine tunes which are stated to have appeared in 1560 and 1561, and the four in 1560 only, are all contained in the 1558 edition.

P. 841, col. 1.—The enumeration of the settings by the various composers in Este's 1592 edition not fully corrected. Sixteen only are by Farmer, and six are by Dowland.

P. 843, col. 2.—Enumeration of contributions by new composers not fully corrected. The correct numbers by Milton, J. Tomkins and Ravenscroft are as already given by me

P. 845, col. 2.—The statement that Playford's 1677 book "contains the whole of the Church Tunes" remains uncorrected. The correction made in the sentence following the title leaves it both ungrammatical and inconsequent.'

Generous, indeed, are the benefactions which, by his will, the late Jacques Blumenthal made to the cause of music. These amount to the munificent sum of £10,000, in addition to the copyrights of and interests in his compositions, which include such popular songs as 'The Message,' 'The Requital,' My Queen,' and 'Sunshine and Rain.' The following are the bequests to music:

£2,000 to the Royal Academy of Music, to institute and found two open scholarships for instruction of two pupils of the said Academy whose principal study is musical composition, to be competed for as the Council of the said Academy shall decide.

£3,000 to the Royal College of Music upon trust, to found an open full maintenance scholarship (i.e., a scholarship which, in addition to providing instruction, contributes to the maintenance of the holder) for the instruction of a pupil whose principal study is musical composition.

£2,000 to the Royal Society of Musicians for charitable purposes in connection therewith.

£500 to the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music, Norwood.

£500 to the Society of British and Foreign Musicians for the Widows' and Orphans' Fund.

£2,000 further to the Royal Society of Musicians of Great Britain for the Widows' and Orphans' Fund, these last two legacies being payable only if the residue of his estate exceeds £6,000.

To the Royal Society of Musicians the testator left all his copyrights and interests in published compositions.

The net personality of Mr. Blumenthal's estate has been valued at a trifle over £62,000.

The records in our present and recent issues bear witness to the fact that the Competition Festival movement continues to grow and prosper. It attracts into its fold many persons of high social position who see in it a happy means of bridging chasms and binding together all classes of the community, and of providing dwellers in the countryside with a pleasant recreation spiced with a sporting flavour. Musicians too are drawn to the movement because they realise that it makes for the educational progress both of executants and audiences. In order to maintain and deserve this interest and support, the promoters of the movement have to keep constantly in mind that it is strictly an educational propaganda. It is not merely a means of discovering prize-winners, but has its greatest concern with those who unfortunately are not successful.

The desire to have a share in the movement is spreading even to the far north of Scotland. Aberdeen, among its other valuable musical assets, has the advantage of the influence of Prof. Sandford Terry, an old St. Paul's Cathedral chorister, who has crowned a successful career in the educational world by securing the Chair of History at Aberdeen University. Prof. Terry has deeply interested himself in the musical doings of his adopted city, and after studying the aims, methods and results of the competition movement in England, he has been filled with a desire to establish a centre in Aberdeen to serve the needs of that corner of Scotland. At his instigation, and backed by Mr. Collingwood and others, a meeting was held at the Marischal College on June 13 in order to discuss his proposition and ways and means of carrying it out. After acutely analysing the situation as to choral music in and about the granite city, Prof. Terry strongly advocated a trial of a competitive festival, and although, naturally, in such an environment there were some criticisms of a cautious and dubious nature, the influential audience he addressed was disposed to consent to adopt the proposed scheme. May all success attend its initiation and fulfilment.

An important series of South African Musical Festivals, under the sole direction of Mr. Albert Archdeacon, will be given during the next two months, the places, dates, and conductors being as follows:

Cape Town. Five Concerts, July 6 to 14. Orchestra and chorus—the latter consisting of the combined choral societies of the city, numbering 430 voices—under the conductorship of Dr. T. Barrow Dowling.

Durban. Two concerts, July 20 and 21. Conductor, Mr. J. F. Proudman.

Maritzburg. July 22.

East London. Two concerts, July 24 and 25. Conductor, Mr. W. J. Chapman.

Port Elizabeth. Two concerts, July 28 and 29. Conductor, Mr. Horace Barton.

Grahamstown. July 30. Conductor, Mr. W. Deane. Bloemfontein. Two concerts, August 3 and 4. Conductor, Mr. George Deale.

Kimberley. Two concerts, August 10 and 11. Conductor, Mr. A. H. Ashworth.

The works to be performed are 'The Creation,' 'St. Paul,' 'Walpurgis Night,' 'King Olaf,' 'Hiawatha,' and 'Stabat Mater' (Rossini). Miss Perceval Allen, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Albert Archdeacon himself are the solo vocalists. They sailed on June 20, and expect to return home on September 5. May all success attend these musical festivals in a country which a few years ago was ravaged by war, but is now enjoying the blessings of peace.

The enormous price, £4,777, recently realised at Christie's for a portrait painted by Gainsborough has been one of the sensations of the present season. A London newspaper, in describing the picture, said:

It was a portrait of the artist's youngest daughter, Mary, who married Johann Christian Fischer, the celebrated hautboy.

Now, it has frequently happened that a bride has been led to the altar by a boy, but it evidently fell to the lot of Miss Mary Gainsborough to meet her matrimonial fate (and mate) at the hands of a hautboy. But then, are not young ladies often wedded to their musical instruments?

Typographical humours are indeed prolific this month, newspapers in town and country contributing curious cuttings carrying conviction that compositors are not always the offenders. The first is from a programme of a London concert, placed above the name of a pianist:

"Sonate E"
"Allegro moderato"
"Rondo"

Mina Andante Haydn

One question naturally suggests itself in trying to elucidate the above, especially in these days of the ascendancy of women: Can the 'Allegro moderato' be assigned to a descendant of the great Italian poet? In that case should not the name read 'Ann Dante'?

This from a provincial journal:

Brahms's trio for female voices was accompanied by two hours and a half.

The above accompaniment curiosity recalls a certain concert incident:

She (vocalist): I shall sing my song in German; I hope you won't mind.

He (accompanist): Not in the least; so long as you don't object to my playing the accompaniment in English.

The reporter of a competition festival held in the north of England made some original remarks in recording the performances of the solo vocalists. His bête noire seems to have been the 'libretto,' judging by the following extracts from his critical observations:

Miss ——. Good voice, some artistic feeling and expression. The libretto appeared to be where the mistakes were made.

Miss —. Very good voice, libretto again. Fine voice, and any amount of quality, but libretto swallowed everything.

In addition to the lady competitors handicapped by the 'libretto,' a mere man was likewise afflicted, perchance through swallowing it. The dire results are thus recorded:

Mr. —. Nice quality of tone. In the first piece suffered from libretto, and the intonation soon got all wrong. He sang against the piano.

No wonder, poor fellow!

Messrs. William E. Hill & Sons have recently been granted Royal Warrants of Appointment as Violin and Bow Makers to H.M. The King of Italy, and H.M. The King of Portugal. The honour conferred thereby on English violin-making is great, and in the case of Italy, it comes from the land which gave birth to the immortal Stradivari.

THE CHURCH OF ST. LAWRENCE JEWRY. INTERIOR, LOOKING WEST. (From 'London Churches ancient and modern.' By kind permission of the publisher.)

Mr. Bumpus's main thesis is architecture, but his of extraordinary Use and Variety, and such as neither pages are from time to time pleasantly seasoned | St. Paul's has, or can have? with musical references to the churches of London, and, it may be added, to those of London beyond the border.

The first of these (in vol. i.) is to the Temple Church, with an account of the famous contest between Father Smith and Renatus Harris for the building of the organ in that ancient and legal sanctuary. It is doubtful, however, if the present organ 'retains all the original pipes in the great and choir organs'; and the reference to the quarter-tones in this instrument should be in the past, not the present tense, as the extra notes were removed many years ago. St. Helen's Church, Bishopsgate, near where Shakespeare lived, contains fine monuments to Sir John Crosbie and Sir Thomas Gresham, two well-known city worthies of olden times, and here the

There were formerly—perchance there are now—several lady organists of city churches. One of these, Miss Letitia Rist, of All Hallows', Barking, in the middle of the last century, was a benevolent lady who gave practical proof of her kindness to animals.

She used in frosty weather to collect ashes from the neighbouring houses and scatter them on Tower Hill, which, from its steepness, at all times tested the strength of the horses drawing up heavy loads from the wharves, and especially so during the winter months when the stones were slippery, and many a good horse was thus saved from falling. From many a sturdy carter might have been heard the words: 'Thank you, ma'am,' as he and his horse passed in safety over the frosty ground.

Mr. Bumpus makes more than one reference to those beautiful and magnificent old organ cases, many Gresham Prize compositions were annually sung in of which have been ruthlessly demolished. The organ

James's, Piccadilly—of which Raphael Courteville, composer of the tune 'St. James,' was once organist—' is in two oaken cases standing one before the other, the organist's place being between them. The great case is in the florid style of the period of its original construction (Louis Quatorze). The carving of fames, angels, cherubs' heads, &c., with which it is adorned, strikingly mark by their great beauty the master hand of Gibbons.' At St. Lawrence Jewry (in Gresham Street)—of which John Robinson was at one time organist—Renatus Harris's organ, built in 1685, the birth-year of Bach and Handel, 'happily retains its place upon a screen richly carved in dark oak at the west end of the church.' Important additions were made to the instrument in 1710 and 1725, and about thirty years ago it was completely restored. The handsome case, designed by Wren and carved by Grinling Gibbons, has of necessity been added to by

Space will only permit us to make a passing reference to the second volume, which includes musical references to St. Luke's, Old Street (of which Henry Smart was organist), and the modern churches of St. Andrew's, Wells Street, All Saints', Margaret Street, St. Paul's, Knightsbridge, and St. Matthias, Stoke Newington (of which Dr. W. H. Monk was organist from 1852 till his death in 1889), all five of these being noted for their musical services, Anglican or Gregorian. Mention is made of the burial places, in the old churches, of departed worthies. In this connection, to the list of celebrities buried in St. Paul's, Covent Garden—which includes Sir Peter Lely, the side cases with 'towers' and 'flats' but in perfect Grinling Gibbons, and John Weldon, the composer keeping with the original work. Another fine old organ case in St. Stephen's of mention that in the year 1453, John Dunstable, Church, Walbrook, of the instrument built in 1765 master of astronomy and music, was buried in the by England—not Byfield, as stated by Mr. Bumpus —has also happily been retained. (See the illustration above.) Mr. Bumpus regards this building as 'internally the most original and beautiful of the fifty parochial churches rebuilt by Wren,' and pronounces it a masterpiece. He adds: 'the master of astronomy and music, was buried in the crypt of St. Stephen's, Walbrook, and that a tablet to his memory is now placed in the church.

The subject is of absorbing interest, but sufficient has been said to induce many readers to turn to Mr. Bumpus's informing pages, which are made additionally attractive by the excellent photographs ensemble, as the visitor enters by the western which illustrate this pair of readable volumes.

PROPOSED MEMORIAL TO DR. F. J. SAWYER.

At an influential meeting held at the Town Hall, Hove, on May 30, and presided over by the Rev. Walter Marshall, it was unanimously resolved to raise a memorial to the late Dr. Sawyer, as a mark of personal love and in recognition of his devoted services as organist of St. Patrick's Church, Hove, and also in appreciation of his high abilities as a musician, and of his efforts for the spread of all that is best in the Art. The form of the memorial will depend to a large extent upon the amount subscribed, but it is hoped to found an annual prize at the Royal College of Organists, with which Dr. Sawyer was so closely associated, and to place some suitable memorial in St. Patrick's, Hove, the church in which, as organist, he served with marked distinction for more than thirty years.

Subscriptions will be gratefully received and acknowledged by the honorary secretaries of the 'Dr. F. J. Sawyer Memorial Fund,' 13, Cambridge Road, Hove, Sussex.

THE PAN-ANGLICAN CONGRESS.

This important Congress was opened by a special intercessory service at Westminster Abbey on June 15, at which the vocal music included Stainer's arrangement of the Miserere, mei Deus, sung in procession, and S. S. Wesley's anthem 'O Lord, my God' (Solomon's Prayer). Sir Frederick Bridge played as opening voluntary the Largo from Dvorák's Symphony 'From the New World,' and at the conclusion of the service S. S. Wesley's Choral Song.

The concluding service at St. Paul's Cathedral, on St. John the Baptist's Day (June 24), was of a most imposing, impressive, and inspiring nature. Thanksgiving was its dominant note, and the music fully reflected the spirit which pervaded the densely crowded cathedral. The Choir, where some 300 bishops were seated, furnished a coup d'acil unique in the history of the Anglican Communion.

Above the stalls on the north side and in the arch next to the organ, a temporary platform had been erected to accommodate a full orchestra, which previous to the service played the symphony to Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise.' The Litany was sung in procession to the five-part setting by Tallis (unaccompanied). The opening and closing choruses (unaccompanied). The opening and closing choruses of the 'Hymn of Praise' furnished the music for the anthem, sung while a large number of the Bishops placed on the Altar thankofferings entrusted to them. Sir George Martin's fine Te Deum, composed for Queen Victoria's Diamond Jubilee (1897), was also sung; and the hymns were 'Great Lord of wisdom, life and light' (written specially for the Congress by Mr. A. L. Francis and sung to Sullivan's tune 'Bishopgarth'), 'Now thank we all our God,' and 'Praise, my soul, the King of heaven.' All these thrilling outbursts of praise were accompanied by the orchestra, who played at the end of the service Elgar's 'Imperial March.' Sir George Martin conducted, and Mr. Charles Macpherson presided at the organ.

Criticism of such a service would be quite out of place; suffice it to say that on this memorable occasion the rendering of the music was most thrilling and devotional in its glorious outpouring of perfect praise, and that it fully maintained the splendid traditions that are so worthily associated with the great cathedral in the greatest city of the world.

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE'S CANADIAN VISIT.

Sir Frederick Bridge has returned home from his successful tour in Canada, skilfully organized by Dr. Charles Harriss, having been everywhere most cordially received. He lectured upon and conducted performances of English Church Music, beginning at Montreal on April 27, and subsequently at Ottawa, Toronto, Belleville, St. Catherine's, Woodstock, Hamilton, London, Brantford, Winnipeg, Regina, Moosejaw, Calgary and Vancouver.

Thus he covered the Dominion from east to west, or, as he has said, 'I journeyed, and lectured, and conducted, and played the organ all the way to Vancouver and back, and at Toronto I delivered my lecture from the pulpit of the cathedral'! Moreover, he held several conferences in the interests of the examinations of the Royal College of Organists; received the degree, honoris causa, of Doctor of Music from the University of Toronto; visited Conservatoires; heard his 'Flag of England' well sung by the inmates of an Asylum for the Blind; made the acquaintance of the Indians; saw some of the wonderful sights of nature; was most hospitably entertained; and altogether he had 'a real good time.' In Mr. Albert Archdeacon the Westminster Abbey organist had a most genial companion and valuable colleague, who efficiently discharged the dual duties of manager and solo vocalist.

For the purpose of illustrating his lectures, Sir Frederick had made a selection of anthems and services typifying five centuries of English church music. This selection, published by Messrs. Novello in two volumes, was made to suit the capacities of large or small choirs. In regard to its performance, by fifty different choirs, he says: 'It is a remarkable fact that of all the music I sent out for the choirs to rehearse for these illustrations, everything was sung with one exception. Even this had been rehearsed, but there was not time for its performance. The choirs sang beautifully, especially in the cathedral at Toronto under Dr. Ham, where the performance was quite equal to any cathedral performance in England.' Again: 'Canadian church choirs have a high standard of ability, and I was surprised to find how very good they are all round. As regards their singing, the people in the western part of Canada remind me of those in the North of England. They have a great deal of "go," more, I think, than I found in the Eastern Provinces. Musically, as well as commercially, there is a great future for Canada.

Apart from the value of a record of something attempted, something done by these well-equipped singers of the daughter country across the Atlantic, it may not be without interest to give a complete list of the contents of the two volumes of English church music sung during Sir Frederick Bridge's memorable visit to the Dominion:

Dr. H. A. Harding, of Bedford, has been appointed honorary secretary of the Royal College of Organists, in succession to the late Dr. F. J. Sawyer. We hope to give a portrait and an account of Dr. Harding's career in an early issue of this journal in connection with an illustrated article on 'A visit to Bedford'; in the meantime the College is to be congratulated upon having secured so able and so suitable a musician to fill an important office.

The value of choir schools as educational centres has again been demonstrated at St. Michael's College, Tenbury, that splendid foundation due to the munificence of Sir Frederick Ouseley. We are glad to hear of the recent success of two of the choristers—one has obtained a scholarship of £50 per annum at Malvern College, and the other has secured a scholarship of a similar amount at Durham, thereby showing that in spite of time devoted to the excellent musical education the Tenbury boys receive, they need not suffer in their classical and mathematical work. The genial Warden (the Rev. John Hampton) of the College is to be warmly congratulated, as are also the two choristers, on results which are gratifying to all concerned.

Mr. T. Tertius Noble is giving the second half of an interesting series of ten organ recitals at York Minster during the present month. In a preface to the booklet containing the complete programmes, the Dean of York says: 'Mr. Noble's object in giving this very attractive series of Organ Recitals, in addition to his many duties, is not merely to gratify the lovers of good music, but also to assist in raising additional support for the Church Services It is pleasant to find that more than one fourth of the fifty-eight pieces played by Mr. Noble are by English composers; indeed, one whole programme, that of June 18, was entirely devoted to native works. Here it is:

, Selections from Gounod's oratorio 'The Redemption' were performed at Winchester Cathedral on May 21. The choruses were sustained by the Cathedral Oratorio Choir, formed in 1902, and the orchestra consisted of members of the Church Orchestral Society and local players, both professional and amateur. Members of the cathedral choir—Messrs. Hone, Tyack and Whitwam, and the choristers—sang the solos, and Dr. E. T. Sweeting, organist and music-master of Winchester College, presided at the organ. The oratorio was conducted by the cathedral organist, Dr. William Prendergast, whose Magnificat in C, with orchestral accompaniment, opened the service.

At the church of St. Andrew-the-Great, Cambridge, on Sunday evening, May 31, Dr. A. Herbert Brewer's sacred cantata 'Emmaus' was sung, with orchestral accompaniment, by an augmented choir of fifty voices. The orchestra was led by Mr. R. L. Eber, of Christ's College, and Mr. J. F. Chubb, organist of Christ's College, presided at the organ. The soloists were Mrs. G. E. Green and Mr. Joseph Reed, and Mr. Joseph Hill, organist of the church, conducted an impressive performance of the Gloucester organist's devotional music.

At a 'Choir Festival' held at the Church of the Good Shepherd, Lee, on June 18, S. S. Wesley's anthem 'Ascribe unto the Lord' and a selection from Mendelssohn's 'Adagio religioso' for violoncello and organ, by Borch, and Elgar's 'Sursum Corda' for string quartet and organ. Mr. R. W. Browne is the organist and choirmaster of the church.

THE NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD OF WALES.

A QUAINT AND PICTURESQUE CEREMONY. As an important and indispensable preliminary to the Royal National Eisteddfod to be held in London during the month of June, 1909, the Gorsedd met in the gardens of the Inner Temple on June 10, when the necessary Proclamation of the Eisteddfod was made with all due significance and solemnity amidst appropriate surroundings.

From some interesting particulars supplied to the Press on that picturesque occasion, we learn that the Welsh word 'Eisteddfod' means a Session, implying a Session of 'Bards.' The word 'Bardd' in Welsh, however, means, in the first place, a poet, because in ancient times almost all knowledge was imparted in metrical form: but a 'Bard' is not necessarily a poet; the term includes also persons who are religious and moral teachers, and others who are interested in sciences and arts. At an Eisteddfod prizes are offered for compositions in poetry, literature, arts and crafts, and the list of subjects in which prizes are given is, according to an old custom, proclaimed publicly at least 'one year and a day' before the Eisteddfod is held. This Proclamation (called in Welsh 'Cyhoeddiad') must be made in a meeting of the Bards, which is called the 'Gorsedd of Bards of the

has been held from time to time ever since. 'Gorsedd,' i.e., the 'overseat' or throne, is the term used to describe the association or community which fixes the place of the National Eisteddfod, and, through its committees, many of the details of its meetings. The Ceremony of the Gorsedd is described in writings of the 16th century, and appears to be referred to in writings by bards of two or three centuries earlier. Tradition, however, ascribes to it a far earlier origin. It is customary to hold the Gorsedd meetings in some open and conspicuous spot covered by green turf. A circle of stones, twelve or nineteen in number, is made. Outside this circle three other stones are placed in position, over which, from the centre of the circle, the rising sun could be seen on the solstices and the equinox. The meetings must be held in the open air and by day, 'in the Face of the Sun the Eye of Light' ('Yn Ngwyneb Haul, Llygad Goleuni'), as the motto expresses it. Only under rare circumstances can a meeting of Gorsedd be held under a roof, and then in a Church or within a Court of Justice.

In the centre of the circle a large stone, supported by three others, is placed. This is called the 'Maen Llôg or Logan Stone.' From it the Proclamation The Bards, accomand other speeches are made. panied by the chief persons of the district in which they meet, form a procession to the circle. They are divided into three orders: Bards, Druid bards and the Ovate bards. These are poets, teachers of religion and morals, and persons interested in literature, science and art. According to their Order, Bards are robed in different colours: the Poet-bards in light blue, the colour of the sky, as an emblem of the celestial origin of poetry; the Druid-bards, in white, the colour of light, denoting the purity of religion and morals; and the Ovate-bards in green, as of living vegetation, an emblem of growth and progress. three Orders are equal in degree, though differing in function; the officials being only chief among their When necessary their functions are interchangeable: a provision against the extinction of the Institution.

Upon the large stone in the centre of the circle the President or 'Arch-druid' stands surrounded by the chief officers of the Gorsedd. At each of the stones of the circle stand one or more of the Bards, each in the colour of his Order. The Arch-druid wears with his white robe a crown of oak-leaves and acorns, and a great necklet or 'torque' of gold. The proceedings are opened by the sound of the trumpet (Corn Gwlad). The Gorsedd prayer is then recited, a composition thought to be, in its present form, of the 15th century. It is attributed to the bard Talhaiarn, and runs as follows in the variant now used:

GWEDDI'R ORSEDD (THE GORSEDD PRAYER).

Dyro Dduw dy Nawdd;
Ag yn Nawdd, Nerth;
Ag yn Nerth, Deall;
Ag yn Neall, Gwybod;
Ac yngwybod, Gwybod y Cyfiawn;
Ag yngwybod y Cyfiawn, ei Garu;
Ag o garu, Caru pob Hanfod;
Ag ymhob Hanfod, Caru Duw.
Duw a phob Daioni.

And in the knowledge of Justice, the Love of it;

In ancient times the Bards were received with gifts, which are described as from 'tilth, fold, and wood covert' ('o ar ac o fuarth, ac o goedwal'); or, otherwise expressed, 'corn, milk and honey' ('yd, a blith a mel'). These are now symbolized by the presentation to the Arch-druid of the Horn of Welcome (Corn Hirlas), a great horn fitted upon a dragon-stand of silver-gilt decorated with gems and enamels, designed and executed by Mr. W. Goscombe John, A.R.A. The Corn Hirlas is offered ceremonially to the Arch-druid by ladies representing the district. Another offering is made by ladies, a bouquet of plants, trefoil, vervain, corn and mistletoe, symbolical of the Gorseddic seasons. Near the central stone is the Gorsedd Banner, and there are exhibited models of a form of inscribed roll and a wooden book ('Llyfr pren') inscribed with a kind of rune (Coelbren y Beirdd) said to have been used by bards of old.

In ancient times the Bardic circle was sacred against armed force, and a ceremony symbolizing a truce is carried out. The Arch-druid holds a sword half-sheathed; the attendant Bards touch it on the hilt and scabbard. The Arch-druid cries aloud three times 'A oes Heddwch' (Is it Peace?), and is three times answered by all 'Heddwch' (It is Peace). The sword is then completely sheathed. The sword now used is of great size and elaborate workmanship, designed, partly executed and presented by Sir Hubert von Herkomer, R.A. A harper is always present at the Gorsedd, and accompanies the singer of 'Penillion.' These are stanzas, partly impromptu, adapted to difficult strains of music, of which the singer, Eos Dar, is master. The harp should be of the old Welsh triple-row construction (Telyn deires).

Many opinions are held as to the age and origin of the Gorsedd and its ceremonies, some considering its institution to be extremely ancient, while others consider its present form to have been fixed in the Tudor period. The Gorsedd may be looked upon as a survival of the traditional Round Table of King Arthur, which in its turn embodied some similar institution previously existing among Britons of earlier times. Whatever its age or origin, it is an institution around which the natives of Wales, irrespective of class, rally, and which plays a most important part in the encouragement of learning and culture in that country. Their Gracious Majesties King Edward VI.'. and Queen Alexandra are members of the Gorsedcd Circle, as indeed are representatives of every class of the commonwealth, even to the delver in the mines and the shepherd of the mountains.

As an ancient institution promoting the culture of literature, science and art, especially music—one that is open to all, and as a rallying point for the patriotism of all classes—the Eisteddfod is worthy of support by the sons and daughters of the Cymru and by all well-wishers of the Principality.

An interesting concert was given by the Windsor and Walkerville Choral Society in Currey Hall, Windsor, Ontario, on May 15. The programme, which was of a very varied character, consisted in the first part of sacred music, selections from Handel's 'Samson,' Haydn's 'Creation,' Sullivan's 'Prodigal Son,' the choral epilogue from the 'Golden Legend' and Gounod's 'By Babylon's wave'; the second part was secular, and included music by Sullivan, Roland Rogers and others, and the march and chorus from 'Tannhäuser.' The choir, conducted by Mr. H. Whorlow Bull, sang with much spirit, a part-song by Coombs, 'A June day,' for ladies' voices being given with great delicacy of expression. A small string orchestra assisted, and the solo vocalists were: Miss Elizabeth Emery, Miss Winifred Parker, Mr. W. Kitching, Dr. L. D. Hogan and Mr. H. Whorlow Bull. The concert was a fitting pendant to the performance of the 'Hymn of Praise' given by the Society earlier in the year.

ELGAR'S NEW CHORAL WORKS.

There is sweet music (Op. 53, No. 1). Words by Tennyson. Dedicated to Canon Gorton.

Deep in my soul (Op. 53, No. 2). Dedicated to Julia A. Worthington. Words by Byron.

O wild west wind (Op. 53, No. 3). Words by Shelley. Dedicated to W. G. McNaught, Mus. Doc.

Owls (an epitaph) (Op. 53, No. 4). Words anonymous. Dedicated to Pietro D'Alba.

The Reveille (for men's voices, T.T.B.B.) Words by Bret Harte. Dedicated to Henry C. Embleton.

Sir Edward Elgar has already produced many beautiful part-songs, but he has never been so happily inspired as in the case of the first number of his recently published Opus 53, composed during the past winter in Rome. It is indeed a wonderful piece of music, the like of which, for dreamy aloofness, gossamer lightness and delicacy, and poetry of the highest type it would be difficult to find. The words will be readily recognized as the first stanza of the choric song in Tennyson's 'Lotos eaters.' composer seems to have assimilated the poet's ideas absolutely, and become so fully imbued with their spirit that his strains give the impression of a perfect translation into the language of music. Though laid out for eight voices, the piece contains very little genuine eight-part writing. At the outset the two sections, male and female, of the choir are employed in antiphonal style, the one answering the other as the first six lines of the poem are unfolded. Soon the music becomes more complicated, though the composer's art is so hidden in the spontaneousness of conception that his means to an end may easily be overlooked while effects both rich and rare follow one Of these not the least striking are due to a circumstance which will attract some attention and may at first sight startle the majority of choral singers, viz., two key-signatures! The keys of A flat for the female and G for the male voices are used simultaneously throughout the piece. That this oddlooking device is adopted for the sake of convenience and not with the set purpose of 'doing something out of the common,' or throwing extra difficulties in the singers' path, need scarcely be insisted upon. The juxtaposition of the two keys causes delightful surprises. For instance, when, after the first eight-bar phrase sung by tenors and basses in the key of G, the sopranos and altos float in, almost imperceptibly, with gently ascending A flat chords, while the tenors and basses softly sustain a low G in octaves, the effect is magical. This device is repeated near the end, and leads into the final cadence consisting of the two keychords sung to the word 'sleep' by the two sections of the choir alternately. To the male voices is assigned the last word, a merest whisper, pppp, the piece thus ending in the key (G) in which it began.

> There is sweet music here that softer falls Than petals from blown roses on the grass,

A tragic note is struck in the second number of the set, 'Deep in my soul.' The gloom of despair overclouding Byron's poem has strongly appealed to the composer, and a deeply affecting musical setting is the result. The piece—set in the key of E flat is partly of the nature of a solo for the basses of the choir, accompanied by short detached phrases for the other voices sung ppp or pp. To the basses is given a broad, melancholy but dignified cantabile melody that suggests the moaning of an anguished mind. dead, at the foot of the tree.' Finally, a 'bier, spread the first section, in E flat, ends with the cantabile accompanied. though differently, The second verse or contrasted section (in E) opens solenne with a monotone unison passage for sopranos and basses, above which the contraltos give forth pp short quaver-triplet phrases, the cold, dismal effect being heightened by the resultant harmony. A short passage in canonic imitation—sad in expression, but of affecting melodic beauty-concludes the section, but not before the contraltos have once more uttered pp their vague, weird quaver-phrase referred to above. For the sake of form as well as greater effect the composer repeats the poet's first verse with its setting. Yet the repetition is more than that. The expression is greatly intensified by partly assigning the 'solo' melody to the basses in octaves (thus reaching the low B natural—ad lib.—below the staves!), by raising the seven-part climax in pitch, and increasing the melodic and harmonic interest. A powerful emotional appeal is thus made by this broad, though short culmination. While the basses sustain the low D sharp (enharmonic E flat) in octaves, the other voices, with short phrases, pp and estinto, conclude a piece remarkable for unconventionality and nobility of pathos.

Of a vastly different type is the third number. For his text Elgar has gone to the last stanza of Shelley's 'Ode to the west wind,' except that he has used the opening lines of the poem, 'O wild west wind,' for an introductory invocation. The piece—like its predecessor in the key of E flat—answers more nearly to the definition of a part-song, as generally understood, than any other of the set. Harmony and counterpoint are of equal importance throughout, and productive of many fine effects. The broad Invocation, nobilmente, is in seven and eight parts, and leads to a longsustained discord of rugged grandeur. The expression marks appertaining to it may be quoted as a sample of what the composer exacts from his Here they are: sf > p < f. singers. sort of thing is not perfectly acquired all at once. It is doubtful if a piece of similar size and scope exists which is so abundantly—if not superabundantly provided with words of expression. The speed is fast: With the greatest animation, but without hurry,' and the music palpitates with life and freedom. The breathless energy of its onward-rushing melodies is largely due to a copious use of triplets, very against two.' The first broad climax occurs at the words 'Be thou, spirit fierce, my spirit,' where the voices, molto allargando, rise to fff, after which the music presses forward, sempre con ardore, with With degrees of animation exhilarating impetuosity. and expression it reaches a tender lyrical passage of comparative simplicity and insinuating melodic warmth at the words 'O wind, if winter comes, can spring be far behind?'—a fine outburst of deep feeling. After an unexpected transition to D major and an abrupt return to E flat for the cadence passage, the close is reached with a few weighty, stirring chords in seven- and eight-part harmony.

The last piece in this set (Opus. 53), entitled 'Owls, an epitaph,' almost baffles description. The words (anonymous) are as strange as the music. 'Owls'? and why 'An epilaph'? There There are no references to Minerva's sacred birds anywhere in the poem. But the scene is evidently laid in a forest, at The poet muses on the vanity of things mundane: they are as 'nothing.' He hears the dead leaves fall, and a wounded 'wild thing' mourning in the night, and how it 'Cries in its dread, till it lies After rising to a short climax in seven parts at the with a pall, is now at the foot of the tree.' And, as an words 'Save when to thine my heart responsive swells,' answer to his reiterated 'What is that?' comes ever the 'owlish' cry of 'nothing.' Little need be said in the way of analysis. Each of the three verses opens with the question 'What is that?' assigned to tenors and basses. The answer, 'Nothing,' is given by sopranos and contraltos, a pause on the first syllable of the word giving the effect of a prolonged sigh. A few solemn bars in funeral march rhythm follow, and include a strange, chromatically descending and weirdly harmonized passage for the upper voices in close harmony, above a sustained note for the basses which may suggest half-stifled sobs or even soft sardonic laughter. A sad, two-bar phrase in unison for the four voices is assigned to the same words, 'All that can be is said,' in each of the three verses. In fact, the music is virtually identical in them, except for a subtle change of key from E flat to E natural for the second verse, the substitution of a long, wailing 'Ah!' for 'Nothing,' and the broadening out of the Funeral March phrase, its effect being intensified by means of longer notes, additional rallentandos, &c., in the last verse. The piece ends with tenors and basses asking 'Is it-what?' sung pp, and sopranos and contraltos insisting for the last time on the inexorable, terrible answer, 'Nothing,' uttered pppp, a merest breath on the air.

The Reveille, a lengthy piece for male voices, is issued, like many of Elgar's smaller compositions, without any Opus number. It is a rugged, virile setting of Bret Harte's poem dealing with the call to arms of the American North in the cause of antislavery. To suggest 'the tramp of thousands, and of armed men the hum,' as well as 'the quick alarming drum,' great and masterly use is made of a rhythmical staccato quaver figure, occasionally for the basses alone, in monotoned bare fourths, while to the tenors (f) is given the reiterated 'Come, come.' In setting the appeal, 'Come, Freemen, come! ere your heritage be wasted, the composer, in a melodious strain, boldly harmonized, works up to the first broad climax. In a martial piece of this description, dissonances to suggest strife and death are naturally expected, wherefore no surprise is experienced at the words Better there in death united than in life a recreant, where against the f quaver 'drum tapping' of the basses on A flat, D flat, A flat, the tenors, with their utmost force and in sustained notes, ejaculate 'Come' on a chord written for the singers' convenience as that of A major. The music, full of light and shade, of dramatic intensity and emotional fervour, waxes to intense excitement as in the final lines we hear how

A trumpet voice, proclaiming, Said, 'My chosen people, come!' Then the drum, Lo! was dumb, For the great heart of the nation, Throbbing, answered, 'Lord, we come!'

These lines are treated with great breadth. The first 'come' is assigned to the upper F and D flat of the voices, the simple major third, vociferated fff ringing out like a veritable trumpet call. A climax of rare dignity is reached at the words 'For the great heart of the nation,' &c. The passage, forcefully harmonized, is to be sung con tutta forza, Lento; molto espress. e sostenuto, the first tenors having to a tack fff, their high B natural, while the second basses ad lib. descend to the B flat below the stave. second basses' regular downward steps will prove a notable point in an outburst of real grandeur. final words 'Lord, we come' are treated with the requisite devotional calm, the piece ending pianissimo, impressive to the last.

THE COLOGNE MÄNNERGESANGVEREIN.

This famous male-voice Choir, reputed to be one of the best in Germany, gave two concerts at Queen's Hall on June 1 and 5. They arrived in England about a week before the date of their first London concert, but they had previously sung with much success at Manchester. The Choir was founded in 1842, and by means of over five hundred concerts they have been able to hand over to charities the large sum of £25,000. They came to this country in 1853, 1854, 1857 and 1883, and their visit on the present occasion was prompted by the tour in Germany made in 1906 by a Yorkshire Choir, under the direction of Dr. Coward.

The Cologne Choir consists of about 150 gentlemen of the educated classes. The balance of tone is excellent: the best voices are by no means monopolised by the outside parts, as is often the case with choirs of this constitution. The first tenors, although they use 'falsetto' for the very high pitches, are not altos such as are often found in English male-voice choirs, but they have the power to produce a light, fluent quality of tone in the high B flat region, and their voices, although not particularly sweet, are fairly blendful. The basses display some richness and some deep resonant low notes, but with vivid recollections of recent performances by some of the finest male-voice choirs in the north of England, loyalty impels us to record that we are not outclassed in this department. Although the tone generally of the Cologne singers is round, to an English ear there is just a suspicion of a ring which we define by the word 'metallic.' But when all is said, it is abundantly clear that the Choir is splendidly equipped and musically capable of per-forming with dramatic and thrilling expression, and with the most subtle rhythmic and tonal refinement.

The following were the choral pieces in the two London programmes: Finer Coverns

The technique displayed was conclusive proof not only of the ability and sensitiveness of the choralists, but of the masterful skill of their exceedingly able conductor, Prof. Joseph Schwartz. Special and attractive features of the execution were the oneness of the vowel production, and the compact unity of the rhythmic attack. The tonal attack was exact, and therefore we were at once presented with a complete resonant chord, and had not to await the clearing off of The syncopation of the inner parts beating against the a preliminary haze. This unstinted praise can be awarded to the performance of nearly every choral piece presented at the two concerts.

Miss Angèle Vidron, of the Opera at Cologne, sang solos with much grace and charm, and Mr. Willy Hess contributed some violin solos.

Life of Richard Wagner. Vol. vi. By Wm. Ashton Ellis. [Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co., Ltd.]

In a note prefixed to vol. v. of this remarkable biography, Mr. Ellis says: 'In all probability volume vi. will cover the next six to nine years of Wagner's life.' As a matter of fact, vol. vi. covers only four years of that period! Assuming that these proportions will be continued, six more volumes may be expected, making twelve in all; and at the present rate of progress the work will not be completed until the year 1917, four years after the centenary of the composer's birth.

No one can charge the author of this voluminous life-story of Wagner with lack of enthusiasm in his subject. Painstaking to a degree and microscopical in his methods of setting forth facts, he is prone to be discursive. And is it the best trait in the character of an out-and-out heroworshipper—if ever there was one, Mr. Ellis certainly deserves that designation—to depreciate other folk in order to super-glorify his idol? First poor Minna Wagner—for whom much sympathy must be felt—and then Franz Liszt, Wagner's true friend and generous benefactor, come under the depreciatory displeasure of our author. For the rest the reader is referred to these 450 pages of a book which treat of an interesting and important period of Wagner's career. Their perusal will convince him that Mr. Ellis is a master of research and that he means well, even if his style has a peculiar idiom of its own.

In his 'Supplemental Notes' to the present volume Mr. Ellis gives amusing accounts of how he went to work in order to verify or disprove two errors in vol. v., which we ventured to point out in our review of it (The Musical Times, August, 1906, p. 551). One of these was the wrong number of the house in Balcombe Street (formerly Milton Street), in which Ferdinand Praeger received Wagner as his guest in 1855. In visiting the spot, Mr. Ellis says: 'What landmark could I fly to?' There was a Wesleyan Chapel in the street, but English chapels mostly stand superior to numbering, and this particular one formed no exception. Deserted by spiritual aid, I turned to the spirituous; and sure enough—a licensed house, The Portland Arms, had survived all cataclysmic changes. . . to which I can swear—please don't be shocked—for I slaked my thirst there.' We can afford to smile at these personal pleasantries, more especially as, in both instances, Mr. Ellis confirms the accuracy of our corrective statements. May he long be spared to slake our thirst for a full, if overflowing, account of Wagner's wonderful career.

Organ music. By various composers.
[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

The series entitled 'Original Compositions for the Organ' is rapidly approaching its 400th number, a remarkable testimony to the productivity of composers for 'the king of instruments.' A recent instalment (Nos. 375-380) begins with a 'Grand Chœur' (No. 2) by Mr. Alfred Hollins, a brightly written piece in Minuet form and in the Key of C, with a contrasting Trio in the subdominant key. The strenuous chromatic passage towards the end of the composition will not escape notice. A 'Cavatina in G,' which fully justifies its title, is an unpretentious but melodious contribution from the pen of Mr. Ernest Newton. Dr. Herbert Wareing's ripe musicianship and inventive powers are displayed in an extensive 'Concert Fantasia,' which needs a deft performer, of which there are nowadays many, to do it justice. Two fantasias of an ecclesiastical nature have been composed by Mr. William Faulkes—(1) on 'Old Christmas Carols,' 'What Child is this?' 'The moon shines bright,' and 'The great God of heaven has come down to earth'—and (2) on the fine old melody 'Urbs beata.' The latter appeals to us more than the former, doubtless by reason of its more attractive subject-matter. To the growing number of Variations must be added those on the chorale 'Jesus ist mein Aufenthalt,' which Mr. Luard-Selby has treated in his usual skilful manner.

As the source of the tune is not given on the piece, we venture to supply the omission: it is from the 'Lüneburgisches Gesangbuch' (Lüneburg, 1686), and is to be found in English hymnals under the name 'Meinhold.'

Two volumes (iii. and iv.) of 'Popular Marches for the organ,' each containing twelve pieces, will be found useful for both recital and church purposes. Fourteen of these twenty-four marches are by native composers, including such well-known names as Hollins, Macfarren, Mackenzie, Parry, and Smart, while the foreign contributors are represented by Guilmant (Marche Triomphale), Mendelssohn (Pilgrims' March, so-called), Tchaikovsky (Marche Funèbre) and Wagner. The practical convenience of having a number of clearly-printed marches bound in two volumes only needs to be mentioned in connection with these useful publications.

Of even greater utility to church organists are the two recently issued books (Nos. 46 and 47) of the Village Organist, as they have been compiled to suit various seasons of the Church's year, or for special occasions. The first book contains suitable voluntaries for Advent, Epiphany, Ascensiontide, Whitsuntide, Feasts of Apostles, Martyrs, or Evangelists, and All Saints' Day; while the second embraces the services of a Dedication Festival, Holy Baptism, Confirmation, Holy Communion, and General Thanksgiving. Original compositions and arrangements furnish the twelve pieces constituting these two books, the last voluntary being S. S. Wesley's 'Choral Song,' a perfect thanksgiving in itself.

Moussorgsky. By M. D. Calvocoressi. 'Les maîtres de la musique.' [Paris: F. Alcan.]

The production of Moussorgsky's chef d'auvre 'Boris Godounow, at the Paris Opera, has prompted M. Calvocoressi—to whom the readers of this journal were lately indebted for an appreciation of Debussy—to publish the work under Moussorgsky adds another name to the list of notice. Russian composers who were educated for other callings. Belonging to a family of the lesser nobility, he was born in 1839 and educated for the Army. In due course he received a commission in a 'crack' regiment, and as in addition to his musical gifts he was the possessor of an agreeable person and cultivated manners, his social success was assured. His love for music declared itself early in life, and he studied the pianoforte as an amateur with more than average success. At that time the popular Italian operas of the day served to satisfy his tastes. Gradually, however, he drifted into the society of the leading musical spirits of St. Petersburg—Borodin, Balakirew, Cui, Rimsky Korsakow and Dargomyjski-and was thus led on to higher aims. After some success in composition he determined to adopt music as his profession, and we find him at the age of twenty years embarking on a new career, actuated by the highest aims, but greatly deficient in technical training. Of his musical associates he appears to have been most strongly influenced by Dargomyjski, who adopted as his principle that 'beauty of phrase was second to truth,' a maxim akin to that of our pre-Raphaelite brethren, 'truth first and beauty afterwards.' For 'absolute' music neither master nor disciple professed much appreciation. The precise meaning of this principle as applied to music is a little difficult of com-Its logical development in dramatic music would seem to be an eternal recitative, which would soon become intolerable.

In addition to a catalogue of Moussorgsky's compositions, M. Calvocoressi has supplied a careful analysis of the more important works. The great success of the composer's life was undoubtedly the opera 'Boris Godounow.' The lurid episode in legendary Russian history on which it is based is taken from a well-known dramatic poem of Poushkin, but greatly modified and rewritten by the composer himself. Produced at the St. Petersburg Opera House in January, 1874, it was a popular success, having been performed for twenty successive nights to crowded houses; but its popularity does not seem to have been maintained, as it was withdrawn from the répertoire in 1876, and from that time the composer seems to have lost heart. He had never been able to make a living by his Art, and after having accepted some inferior position under the government he ended his days in a public hospital at the early age of forty-two.

THE EVOLUTION OF THE FLUTE.

At the last meeting of the Musical Association for the season, held on June 16, Dr. T. L. Southgate read a paper on 'The evolution of the flute.' After tracing the legendary history of the instrument in mythological times, the lecturer went on to say that the actual invention of the flute was lost in antiquity; indeed, there seemed to be no period known to us when the flute was non-existent. The earliest authentic examples had been found in Egyptian tombs, for which the earliest date claimed was 4,000 years ago, though Prof. Flinders Petrie would place it much earlier. Dr. Southgate had had the opportunity of examining several of these instruments, a model of one of which the audience had the felicity of listening to. They were open tubes, generally reeds, open at each end, blown at the top, a form which exists in the present day among many Oriental nations. An example received from the Soudan was formed of wood neatly hooped with metal. Tracing some letters on these hoops, on examination Dr. Southgate was able to make out the word 'Paraffin,' leaving no doubt of their origin! These instruments are widely distributed, and made of various materials, sometimes even of stone, and it was an interesting fact that a member of the Society, Col. Shaw-Hellier, had lately discovered such an instance in excavating for the Among foundations of a house at Taormina, in Sicily. modern nations the whistle head (the flûte-à-bec) for a long time held the field, notably in the forms of the Recorder and the Flageolet, for both of which Mr. Pepys expressed such deep admiration. The actual introduction of the 'German' or 'Traversière' flute appeared uncertain; its early imperfections and the improvements culminating in those of Boehm were traced.

The lecture—followed by a discussion in which the chairman (Mr. F. Gilbert Webb), Dr. Maclean, Messrs. Welch and Cobbett took part-was illustrated with great skill by Mr. J. Finn, accompanied by Mrs. Prior. In addition to trying several of the early instruments, Mr. Finn played some interesting solos on modern flutes, including an air with variations from a recently discovered sonata by Beethoven.

THE OPERA.

The first event to mention, owing to its historic, if not altogether musical importance, is the gala performance which took place at Covent Garden on May 27, in honour of the visit of the President of the French Republic, M. Fallières. As usual on such occasions the house had been decorated florally to an extent that converted it into a huge conservatory, and when the Royal party and their guests entered, the auditorium presented a most brilliant spectacle. The programme consisted of the first act of Bizet's 'The pearl fishers' and the garden scene from Gounod's 'Faust.' Concerning the performance it is only necessary to say that the cast of the first-named excerpt consisted of Madame Tetrazzini (Leila), Mr. John McCormack (Nadir), Mr. Sammarco (Zurga), and Mr. Marcoux (Nurabad); and that the characters in Gounod's work were sustained by Madame Melba, Caroline Hatchard, Edna Thornton, and Messrs. Zanatello and Marcoux. Both excerpts were sung in Italian, and conducted by Mr. Campanini.

The most memorable performance in connection with the works conducted by Dr. Richter was the revival on June 6 of Gluck's 'Armida.' This work, originally produced on September 23, 1777, at the Academie Royale, Paris, when its composer was in his sixty-fourth year, was first mounted at Covent Garden in July, 1906, when the name-part was played by Madame Breval. On the present occasion the character was impersonated for the first time by Miss Destinn, who brought out the tragic element of the rôle, and also sang the music most beautifully. Equally striking was the embodiment of Hate by Madame Kirkby Lunn, and the music of the four minor female characters was charmingly rendered by Miss Caroline Hatchard and Madame Edna Thornton, each lady playing two parts. Mr. Cornelius was duly heroic as Rinaldo, with whom Armida elopes on a rose bank, the aerial flight across the stage being admirably and cleverly managed. Mr. Walter Hyde and Mr. Delmoth were the detective knights who rescue Rinaldo; Mr. Robert Radford was duly impressive as Armida's priestly adviser. The mounting and scenic effects were most picturesque and sumptuous, and Dr. Richter secured a splendid ensemble.

A repeat performance of the work, on June 10, concluded the series of operas sung in German, but previous to this Dr. Richter conducted a second performance of 'Die Meistersinger' on June 2, and 'Die Walkure' on the following evening, special interest pertaining to the latter owing to the part of Brunnhilde being played for the first time here by Miss Edith Walker, who in May made so great an impression by her splendid impersonation of Isolde. Miss Walker was not, however, so successful in Brünnhilde, her reading being deficient in dignity, but it was always sympathetic, particularly in the final scene, and the music was beautifully sung. Madame Agnes Nicholls made her first appearance this season as Sieglinde, and sang very finely, the freshness and purity of her voice increasing the pathos of the part. Madame Kirkby Lunn was magnificent as Fricka. Mr. C. Whitehill repeated his impersonation of Wotan, and Mr. Karl Mang presented a truculent Hunding. With one exception it is worthy of note that the Valkuries were all personated by British artists, and, be it added, with most satisfactory results. Two performances of 'The Flying Dutchman' were given, under Dr. Richter's direction, on June 3 and 8, the name part being respectively played by Messrs. C. Whitehill and Van Rooy. Miss Destinn repeated her thoughtful and highly expressive personation of Senta, Miss Florence Wickham appeared as Mary, and the parts of Erik and Daland were admirably sustained by Messrs. Jörn and Putman Griswold.

The remainder of the season has been and is to be entirely devoted to Italian opera. An imposing representation of 'Aida' took place on May 23, the cast consisting of Mesdames Destinn and Kirkby Lunn, with Messrs. Robert Radford, Zenatello, Marcoux, Scotti and Zucchi. 'Madama Butterfly' was mounted for the first time this season on May 29, Miss Destinn repeating her beautiful embodiment of the unfortunate Butterfly, and Mr. Walter Hyde making his début in Italian Opera as the forgetful Pinkerton. Madame Lejeune was once more the most sympathetic of Suzukis, Miss Hatchard imparted more individuality into the part of Kate Pinkerton than commonly is accomplished, and Mr. Scotti was as finished as usual as the American Consul.

Madame Melba, who made her first appearance this season in 'La Bohême' on May 19, sang in 'Rigoletto' on June 1, and in 'Traviata' on June 17. The part of the Duke in the second-named opera was taken by Mr. Bonci, an intelligent artist with a fine tenor voice. A most successful revival of Rossini's 'Barber of Seville' took place on June 15, Madame Tetrazzini being heard for the first time in England as Rosina. So brilliant was her singing in her first song, the familiar 'Una voce,' that the audience interrupted its continuance after the first verse, and from this point the evening was for her a series of triumphs. Madame Patti, who was present and was most generous in her applause, must have felt that her successor could not give the music in the medium part of the voice with the same beauty of tone as she had done, but the higher florid passages were delivered with exquisite finish and a volume of tone and vocal agility that frequently approached the phenomenal. Signor Bonci entered with great spirit into the part of the amorously persistent Count, the humours of Basilio and Bartolo were divertingly portrayed by Mr. Marcoux and Mr. Gilibert, and Mr. Sammarco was delightfully vivacious as Figaro. The spirit of merriment prevading the work was thoroughly realized by the entire company, and Mr. Panizza, who on this occasion conducted for the first time this season, is to be congratulated on a performance of bright memory.

After an interval of three years Puccini's 'Manon Lescaut was mounted on June 18, presumably at the desire of Miss Lina Cavalieri, a new prima-donna of Continental and American fame, who made her début here on that date. Miss Cavalieri is endowed with great personal beauty and a graceful carriage, a voice of sympathetic quality and dramatic intuition, and an earnest unaffected style, the last-named attribute greatly contributing to her favourable reception. Mr. Zenatello sang very finely as the love-sick Des Grieux, Mr. Scotti gave an admirable embodiment of the rascally Lescaut, and Mr. Gianoli made good use of his few opportunities as Geronte. Mr. Panizza conducted, and the ensemble was excellent. On the following evening, June 19, Bizet's early opera 'The pearl fishers'—originally produced at the Theatre Lyrique, Paris, in 1863—was revived in its entirety, and mounted with remarkably beautiful scenery and a general lavishness which suggested that the Syndicate intended to add the work to the permanent repertoire. Provided they can secure an artist to sing as brilliantly as Madame Tetrazzini, who personated the amorous priestess, the work may acquire a new lease of life. Mr. Bonci was duly ardent as the somewhat reckless lover, Mr. Sammarco gave an admirable personation of the fisherman who sacrifices his life for the lovers, and Mr. Marcoux's powerful bass voice delivered the utterances of the High Priest with impressive effect. Mr. Campanini conducted.

'THE WRECKERS.'

The present hopeless condition of English operatic composers was forcibly illustrated on May 30 at Queen's Hall. On that occasion Miss Ethel M. Smyth, in order to attract the notice of her countrymen to her latest opera, had to give it in concert form, and this in spite of the fact that her previous works include a Solemn Mass, produced at the Albert Hall in 1893, and a one-act opera entitled 'Der Wald,' mounted at Covent Garden in July, 1902.

'The Wreckers,' an opera in three acts, was originally produced under the name of 'Strandrecht,' in November, 1906, at Leipzig, and it has since been performed at Prague. The libretto, by 'H. B.,' unfolds a Cornish story admirably designed for musical treatment. The principal character is Thirza, the young wife of Pascoe, the headman of a Cornish village, whose subsistence largely depends upon the wreckage from unfortunate vessels, the doom of which is assisted by the fisherfolk extinguishing the lighthouse lantern on stormy nights. This procedure is abhorrent to Thirza, who persuades her lover, Mark, to kindle a warning beacon whenever the fantern is extinguished, and with such success that the suspicions of the villagers are aroused and a watch is instituted. This constitutes the opening portion.

In the second act Thirza goes to warn Mark not to light the beacon that night. This leads to an impassioned scene between the couple, ending in Thirza consenting to forsake her husband, and her lighting of the beacon. Pascoe, entering after the lovers have left, discovers his wife's shawl by the beacon, falls insensible, and being found by the watch party is accused of being the traitor. The last act begins with the trial of Pascoe, who is condemned to death, but on hearing the sentence Mark and Thirza confess and are condemned to die imprisoned in a cave which is filled by the sea at high tide.

In setting this libretto Miss Smyth has made most effective use of several Cornish folk-tunes, and has written several charming melodies imitating their characteristics. Of the former may be mentioned Mark's song, 'Cold blows the wind of night' and a charming ditty sung by Avis, who is in love with Mark, 'I know a very pretty girl.' Of the original numbers 'The sun in the sky shines clear.' is most beautiful, and contains the love theme. It is in the second act, however, that Miss Smyth has written her strongest music. The love duet is sketched with a bold becomes stirring and convincing in its emotional fervour. The last act was not given, and of the choruses it is impossible to speak, since they were only suggested by eight ladies supported by the great organ; but the instrumental part, being played by the London Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Arthur Nikisch, made a most favourable impression by reason of its variety, balance of tone, and picturesque character. Thirza's songs were dramatically rendered by Madame Blanche Marchesi, and full justice was done by Mr. John Coates to the strains assigned to Mark. Mr. Hamilton Earle realized the opportunities of Pascoe, and Miss Anna El-Tour sang intelligently as Avis. The audience was large and fully appreciative, and the opera, even under the conditions under which it was represented, made a most favourable impression.

ROYAL COMPOSITIONS.

A vocal recital of a novel character was given on June 10 at Bechstein Hall by Miss Alys Lorraine, in that she had selected her programme entirely from compositions by Royal writers. Although it has been said cynically that it is dangerous to criticise the music of Royalty because it is impossible to tell who may have written it, no one will deny the powerful impetus given to musical art by royal patronage, and that a considerable number of those 'born in the purple' have been musically gifted. Miss Lorraine began her recital with three songs by Henry VIII.—
'Pastime with good company,' What shall I do for love?' and 'O my heart'—which she sang with clever perception of the requirements of the period. They were succeeded by a dainty ditty, 'Mark how the blushful morn,' by Charles I., a Cavatina by Anthony, King of Saxony (1755-1836), and a captivating old-world lyric, entitled 'Charmante Gabrielle,' by Henry IV. of France. Marie Antoinette's charming setting of Florian's poem 'C'est mon ami,' and the Emperor of Germany's robust 'Sang an Aegir' were also included in the selection, and proved a striking contrast in

In June, 1877, an opera entitled 'Santa Chiara,' composed by Duke Ernest II. of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, was mounted at Covent Garden, and an excerpt from this, entitled 'Jedwede Hoffnung,' proved a curious imitation of the old Italian operatic mode. Three songs by the late Prince Consort impressed by their unpretentiousness. Miss Lorraine's music-making ended with four songs—severally named 'The green cavalier's song,' 'The sunny month of May,' 'The blue-eyed maiden's song, and 'Retrospection' —composed by Princess Henry of Battenberg, which possess real artistic worth. The first of these four songs is particularly pretty and dainty, and in the second are some extremely clever and effective harmonic changes that increase the significance of the text.

DR. CAMILLE SAINT-SAENS.

The season of the Queen's Hall Orchestra was brought to a brilliant conclusion on June 15. On that occasion the entire programme was devoted to the compositions of Dr. Camille Saint-Saëns, the famous French composer himself playing the pianoforte solos and accompaniments.

A very large audience gave the hero of the day a great ovation. The programme was as follows:

Suite Algérienne, Op. 60 (1880).

Suite Algérienne, Op. 60 (1880).

Wedding Cake (for pianoforte and string orchestra), Op. 76 (1885).

Dr. CAMILLE SAINT-SAËNS.

Symphonic Poem 'Danse Macabre,' Op. 40 (1874).

The Suite Algérienne, which displays the composer at his best, was superbly played under Mr. Henry J. Wood, who conducted throughout. The three concerted pieces for the hand, and climax rises upon climax until the music pianoforte were performed with extraordinary vim, delicacy, and masterful ease by Dr. Saint Saens. When it is remembered that he is seventy-three years of age, this maintenance of technique and verve is most remarkable. for the music itself, it served to exhibit the great versatility of the composer. There are occasional superficialities, but piquant rhythm, graceful melody, and natural harmony are always present to attract the ear. The vocal music presented had every possible chance, inasmuch as it was sung by Miss Julia Culp, a singer who has completely captured metropolitan audiences. The beautiful song from 'Samson et Dalia' has perhaps never been more thrillingly rendered, and the three songs sung to pianoforte rendered, and the three songs sung to pianoforte accompaniment were performed with that charm of correct temperament which we have learned to associate with this great singer. The two symphonic poems, formerly regarded as advanced music, seemed lucid and sane compared with much that we have recently been called upon to follow and, if possible, understand. But here again the subject-matter was not always so interesting as the treatment.

LONDON SUNDAY SCHOOL CHOIR FESTIVAL.

The Handel Orchestra at the Crystal Palace was twice occupied on June 17 by the massed choralists, junior and senior, of the London Sunday School Choir, a well managed organization which continues to do a large amount of good. In the afternoon some four or five thousand children sang effectively a selection of unison and two-part songs successfully, conducted by Mr. J. Wellard Matthews, and in the evening the adult choir, numbering about 4,000 voices, gave a programme of sacred and secular music under the able direction of Mr. William Whiteman. The chief numbers in the adult programme were 'I praise Thee' from 'St. Paul' (Mendelssohn) and 'The trumpet's loud clangour' from Handel's 'St. Cecilia's Day,' in which the solo portions were undertaken by a select choir.

Festa's madrigal 'Down in a flow'ry vale 'was also in the programme, which concluded with Mr. J. H. Maunder's stirring 'Song of Thor.' A large amateur orchestra, assisted by the Crystal Palace Military Band, took part. Among the purely instrumental pieces, which were given under Mr. Wesley Hammet, were the overture to 'Les Huguenots' (Meyerteer), and Sibelius' 'Finlandis,' a choice that at least showed confidence in the canacity of the band. that at least showed confidence in the capacity of the band. The redoubtable Willesden District Choir, conducted by Mr. J. S. Waddell-who retain the Founders' Challenge Shield in the regrettable absence of other entries for the announced competition—sang Mr. Theodore Wendt's 'Ballade of Spring,' which had been chosen as test-piece for the competition.

WEST KIRBY, HOYLAKE, AND DISTRICT MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

This recent addition to the list of provincial festivals took the form of a series of four concerts held in the Public Hall, West Kirby, on May 21, 22 and 23, under the direction of Dr. W. B. Brierley, organist of West Kirkby Parish Church, to whom it is understood the initiation of the scheme was due. Financial stability was assured before the festival was held, and the inhabitants of this salubrious locality on the estuary of the Dee have found the experiment such a pleasant experience that it is hoped the festival will become a permanent fixture.

The public hall in West Kirby is a building which, if not acoustically good, is capable of seating some 650 people, with a stage upon which room was found for a chorus of 160 voices and a band of forty-five instrumentalists, led by Mr. Alfred Ross. The principal vocalists were Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Miss Esta D'Argo, Madame Ada Crossley, Madame Alice Lakin, Miss Florence Larkworthy, Mr. Webster Millar, Mr. Frederic Austin and Mr. Dalton Baker. The choir, recruited locally, sang with zeal and animation in such popular works as Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast,' Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' Cliffe's 'Ode to the North-East Wind,' Sullivan's 'Golden Legend,' Brahms's Rhapsody for contralto solo with male-voice choir, and the Pilgrims' choruses in Act III. of 'Tannhäuser. The purely orchestral selection included the Leonora No. 3, 'Tannhäuser' and 'Oberon' Overtures, Dvorák's Symphony 'From the New World,' Elgar's 'Variations,' and Bach's Suite in D. The scheme also included Tcharkovsky's Violin concerto, in which the solo part was finely played by Mr. Arthur Catterall.

At the fourth concert, in place of the new Orchestral Suite which Dr. J. C. Bridge had intended writing for the festival, was heard the Intermezzo from his 'Chester' Symphony, and the clever Allegro from the ballet music to his cantata 'Rudel,' founded on 'Sumer is icumen in.' The new 'Rudel,' founded on 'Sumer is icumen in.' The new Durham Professor also conducted with appreciation his Scena for male-voice choir and orchestra, founded on the Welsh air 'The rising of the lark.' During the interval Dr. Bridge, in a breezy speech, presented on behalf of the choir a music cabinet to Dr. Brierley, who was formerly a chorister in Chester Cathedral and later had studied under its able organist, with what advantage was shown in more than one direction during the course of this interesting and successful festival.

SULLIVAN'S 'GOLDEN LEGEND' AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

It is doubtful if any modern cantata could be found so suitable for performance under Handel Festival conditions as Sir Arthur Sullivan's 'Golden Legend,' and it is no wonder that its interpretation on June 19 at the Crystal Palace attracted an enormous audience. As in previous years, the baton was in the hands of Dr. Frederic H. Cowen, whose command of the huge choir of some three thousand voices, supported by the London Symphony Orchestra, was so complete that many thrilling effects were obtained. The results of careful and painstaking rehearsal were specially noticeable in the dramatically conceived Introduction, and in the delivery of the 'Evening Hymn,' but throughout the performance a high level of excellence was maintained. Concerning the soloists, it is sufficient to mention that they were Mesdames Agnes Nicholls and Ada Crossley, Messrs. Ben Davies, Watkin Mills and Charles Bennett. The programme concluded with a Wagner selection in which Madame Nicholls contributed a beautiful rendering of 'Elizabeth's greeting' and the choir sang the march from 'Tannhäuser' with imposing massiveness.

FESTIVAL OF THE TONKUNSTLERVEREIN AT MUNICH.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

The annual festival of the Tonkünstlerverein was held this year at Munich, and lasted from May 30 to June 6. The attendance was good, and several interesting works were performed, some of them for the first time. The most important was Max Schillings's opera 'Moloch,' produced at Dresden in the winter of 1906-7. While recognizing that there are many weak points in the libretto, it must also be admitted that, at least through the second and third acts, the dramatic interest is well sustained. The composer has made the most of his subject, and the work, splendidly made the most of his subject, and the work, splendidly performed under the direction of Felix Mottl in the Prinz Regenten Theatre, secured an ovation for him. Mention should be made of the fine singing of the part of Hiram, priest of Moloch, by Herr Feinhals, and of the charming impersonation of the part of Theoda, by Fräulein Ulbrich. Frederick Delius was represented by the second part of his 'Eine Messe des Lebens,' for soli, choir and orchestra. Herr Kammersänger Ludwig Hess, in conducting the Konzertgesellschaft für Chorgesang and the Münchener Holkanelle, secured a success in the difficult task of realising a Hofkapelle, secured a success in the difficult task of realising a good performance of this exacting work. At a first hearing it was somewhat difficult to appreciate or even understand some of the music, but on the whole the audience were favourably impressed, and the composer was frequently recalled. would be impossible to refer in detail to all the works deserving of notice, but mention may be made of a 'Suite fantastique' for pianoforte and orchestra by Ernest Schelling, a charming work, in which American tunes are skilfully used, which were beautifully played by the composer, and Max Schillings's four songs with orchestra ('Glockenlieder'), which, under the composer's direction, were admirably sung by Herr Kammersänger Hess.

At the general meeting of the Society, Herr Max Schillings, on behalf of Mr. Frederick Delius, read an announcement of the formation of the English Musical League, which was received with much enthusiasm.

London Concerts.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The ninety-sixth season of this veteran organization was brought to a successful conclusion at Queen's Hall on May 28. The long programme opened with Mr. Hamilton Harty's 'Comedy Overture,' produced at the Promenade Concerts last autumn, an acceptable work which would be improved by compression. A judicious application of the blue pencil would go a long way to promote the salvation of more than one composer. The remaining orchestral works were Tchaikovsky's Air and Variations (from Suite No. 3), Beethoven's Symphony in A, and two movements (Nos. 1 and 4) from Edward German's Symphonic suite, 'The Seasons.' Why was the last-named piece relegated to the end of the programme? The soloist of the concert was Master Ernst Lengyel, who demonstrated his wonderful interpretative powers in the solo part of Liszt's Pianoforte concerto in E flat, and in pieces by Chopin and Weber. Dr. Cowen conducted with his accustomed energy and musicianship, and Mr. Frye Parker, the able leader of the orchestra, brilliantly played the violin solo in the Tchaikovsky Suite. A change has been made in the arrangements for next season, as three of the seven concerts are announced to be given in November and December this year, and the remaining four in February, March, and May, 1909.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Notable features of the chamber concert given by the students at Queen's Hall on May 27 were admirable performances of a Fantasia for four violas, composed by Mr. York Bowen, and another work in similar form, but for four violins, by Mr. F. J. Falconner. Mr. Bowen has valiantly championed the cause of the viola as a solo instrument with considerable success, and his Quartet may claim to be unique in tone-colour. The deep tones of the instruments result in some remarkably rich harmonic effects, and the earnestness and thought permeating the music should secure attention to the work. Mr. Falconner's Quartet is lighter in style, and is engaging by reason of its spontaneous brightness and fluency. Master Vivian Langrish showed great promise as a pianist by his crisp and intelligent rendering of three pieces from Mr. Bowen's Miniature Suite, and words of encouragement should be given to Miss Jessie Bristol for her performance of Liszt's Ballade in B minor. Of the vocalists Miss Dorothy Webb and Miss Gertrude Newson were specially successful, the latter in four expressive songs by Miss Elsie Owen, the holder of the Sainton Scholarship.

The students of the operatic class gave a praiseworthy performance of Verdi's 'Ballo in Maschera' on May 30. Exceptional promise was shown by Miss Mary Fielding in her impersonation of Amelia, and by Miss Bella Newstead as Ulrica, and Mr. Thomas Gibbs made good use of his excellent tenor voice in the rôle of Ricardo. Other characters were intelligently sustained by the Misses E. Pelling-Dickson and Margaret Ismay, and by Messrs. MacNaughton Duncan (Renato), Sanders, Pearson, Milner and Curnow. Mr. Edgardo Levi conducted with his usual watchful care.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Distinction and special interest attended the 449th concert given by the pupils in their comfortable concert-hall on June 18. Why? Because they were honoured with the presence of Dr. Camille Saint-Saëns, who kindly conducted his third Symphony (in C minor, Op. 78), a work which the Kensington young people played con amore and with great enthusiasm under the inspiring baton of the composer. Composed expressly for the Philharmonic Society, and produced, under the composer's direction, at the concert of May 19, 1886, this symphony is a somewhat unconventional one, inasmuch as it includes a pianoforte part (à quaire mains) and a part for the organ. These, combined with a very full orchestra, contribute much to the effectiveness of a composition typifying the progress of modern instrumentation.

The remainder of the programme, conducted by Sir Charles Stanford, included Beethoven's 'Namensfeier' overture; Brahms's 'Gesang der Parzen,' for chorus and orchestra; and Lalo's 'Symphonie Espagnole' for violin, brilliantly played by Miss Dorothy Devin. Not the least interesting feature of the evening's music was a clever and poetic setting, by Mr. Ernest Farrar, the holder of a scholarship at the College, of 'The Blessed Damozel,' for contralto, chorus and orchestra, in which the solo part was well sung by Miss Dilys Jones.

NEW SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The last of the excellent series of concerts given this season by this finely-equipped Orchestra took place at the Queen's Hall on June 13. The programme presented on this occasion was typical of the bold policy and high aims of the conductor, Mr. Thomas Beecham, which have earned for him the gratitude of British composers. 'Appalachia' (the aboriginal name for America)—a series of variations on an old slave song for full orchestra and chorus—by Frederick Delius was given for the second time. The chief theme is as follows:

Perhaps the feature of Mr. Delius's music that most attracts attention is the refinement and originality of the orchestration. The music itself, apart from its mode of presentment, seems to moodily brood too much and forces the listener to exert unusual attention in order to follow it as an organism. It would seem that the subject-matter does not present sufficient potentiality to justify so many twists of the variation kaleidoscope. This is the impression after a second hearing. The choral section is brief, but it imparts welcome new colour and some feeling of climax.

Mr. Balfour-Gardiner's Fantasy for orchestra, composed only this year, was also performed. It exhibited talent and occasional power, and some very effective scoring. The Coda, with its tranquil end, had considerable charm. Mr. Holbrooke's Ode for chorus and orchestra, 'Byron,' has not been heard so often as it deserves. Although in places the music does not seem to be specially inspired by the words, it is generally melodious. The last number of the programme was the setting of the 150th Psalm for chorus and orchestra by César Franck, an exultant work which fittingly closed the concert. The choruses were rendered by the Birmingham City Choral Society, a well trained body of voices who sang with refinement and fluency if not with specially rich resonance. Mr. Thomas Meux sang Wotan's 'Abschied' from 'Die Walküre.'

TWO LADY COMPOSERS.

Miss Katherine Eggar, who gave a concert of her own compositions on June 11 at Æolian Hall, is undoubtedly gifted to an unusual degree. For the last two years she has been studying at the Royal Academy of Music, and her Quintet in D minor for pianoforte and strings is music that stirs the imagination of the listener and at the same time excites the esteem of the musician. The first movement is instinct with earnest feeling expressed in melodious and coherent terms; the presto is full of life and gaiety; the slow movement, commenced in an original manner by an unaccompanied quasi recitative for the violoncello, is extremely dignified; while the finale, in Rondo form, is vigorous and exhilarating and full of character. The work, excellently rendered by the composer at the pianoforte, supported by the Wessely Quartet, was most cordially received. A suite for violoncello and pianoforte, comprising five short movements, proved attractive, the string part being tastefully played by Mr. Herbert Withers, with Miss Eggar at the pianoforte. A series of five pianoforte solos illustrating poems on the Norse gods, which proved to be full of fancy and bright ideas, was effectively played by Mr. Claude Pollard. Miss Eggar also submitted half-adozen songs which were admirably sung by Mr. Frederick Ranalow, who was the soloist in a poetical setting for voice, with accompaniment for string quartet and pianoforte, of Shelley's 'My soul is an enchanted boat.' The vocal part of these works is not always so grateful to the voice as it might be, but the accentuation of the words is excellent, and the music contains many proofs of refined feeling and independence of thought.

Miss Louis von Heinrich gave an orchestral concert at Queen's Hall on June 11, when she brought forward a Pianoforte concerto (she herself playing the solo part), an Andante and double fugue for orchestra, and some songs. In all these works Miss von Heinrich afforded proof that she has studied diligently and with earnestness of purpose. The London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Cowen, ably interpreted the orchestral music, and Miss Tilly Koenen was the vocalist.

OXFORD HOUSE ASSOCIATION.

Music as an elevating and philanthropic influence plays an important part in the valuable work being done in Bethnal Green by the Oxford House Mission. Highly satisfactory proofs of the healthy condition of the musical, orchestral and choral organizations at that settlement were afforded at the concert given at Queen's Hall on June 2. An orchestra of over 250 instrumentalists gave good accounts of Méhul's overture 'La Chasse du Jeune Henri,' Borodine's tone-poem 'In the Steppes of Central Asia' and Berlioz's 'Marche Hongroise,' while the choir, consisting entirely of East-end singers, showed notable musical perception in Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens' and Elgar's 'From the Bavarian Highlands.' No less praiseworthy was the singing by the 'Excelsior' boys' choir from Bethnal Green of 'The minstrel boy' and 'All through the rye.' The principal soloists were Madame Evangeline Florence and Mr. J. Campbell McInnes. Mr. Cuthbert Kelly, who conducted, is to be congratulated on securing such excellent results.

THE HANDEL SOCIETY.

It was good to have an opportunity of hearing Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' on May 27 at Queen's Hall, and the Handel Society is to be commended for reviving interest in such beautiful and devotional music. The choir of the Society seems to be suffering from the usual choral difficulty in London, that of obtaining a sufficient number of male voices to secure perfect balance of parts, but under Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's direction an effective interpretation was secured, to which the singing of the soloists—Madame Le Mar, Miss Edith J. Miller, Mr. Henry Brearley and Mr. Thomas Meux—contributed in no small degree. Praiseworthy renderings were also given of Elgar's 'From the Bavarian Highlands,' and Mr. Arthur Beckwith's violin playing deserves mention.

SOUTH HAMPSTEAD ORCHESTRA.

Under the able direction of Mrs. Julian Marshall the South Hampstead Orchestra gave a successful concert on June 4 at Queen's Hall. The programme included Brahms's second Symphony, which was interpreted with intelligent perception of its requirements, and sympathetic support was accorded Mr. Mischa Elman in Saint-Saëns's Violin concerto in B minor.

The British Musical Society can scarcely be said to have justified its name at its concert on June 23 at .Eolian Hall, for out of thirteen composers represented, ten were foreigners, and nearly half the executants appeared to be of foreign extraction. The concert does not call for criticism, except with regard to a 'Fantasia Russe' and 'Chant d'Exit' for violin and pianoforte, composed by Mr. Percy Godfrey. The former is a well-conceived and pleasing piece effectively written for the violin, and the latter is expressive and ends brightly and gracefully. The string part was well rendered by Mr. Zacharewitch.

Mr. Paderewski made his reappearance in England on June 23 at Queen's Hall. He played his own Sonata in E flat minor, Op. 21, a characteristic work in three movements, the first of which is bold and manly in sentiment, and the third exceedingly brilliant. His readings of other works were remarkable for restraint and wonderful technical skill.

The Dulwich Madrigal Society provided a very interesting programme at its Concert in Dulwich High School on May 27. It included 'Come, gentle swains' (Cavendish), 'Phillida, come tell to me' (Orazio Vecchi), 'Sister, awake' (Bateson), 'My bonny lass' (Morley), 'When flowery meadows' (Palestrina), 'Love not me' (Wilbye), 'Weep you no more, sad fountains' (J. W. Ivimey), 'Hark! jolly shepherds' (Hathaway), 'If I had but two little wings' (J. F. Barnett), 'Corydon, arise' (Stanford), and 'O by rivers,' arranged by Bishop. Additional interest was imparted by the fact that all the old madrigal writers represented were contemporaries of Edward Alleyn, Founder of the College. Mr. Walter Ivimey (vocalist) and Miss Ella Ivimey (violinist) added to the enjoyment of this pleasant music-making, and Mr. John W. Ivimey, who conducted, played some pianoforte compositions of his own.

The Emanuel School Musical Society gave its annual concert at the Battersea Town Hall on May 27. The programme included Coleridge - Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Weddingeast' and Blumenthal's 'Night.' The choir acquitted themselves satisfactorily under the able conductorship of Mr. Hedley J. Evans, organist and musical director of the school. There was a capable orchestra of thirty-two performers, who, in addition to playing the accompaniments to the cantata, performed Mendelssohn's 'Athalie' overture and the Gluck-Mottl Ballet Suite. The soloists were Miss Norah Phipps, Mr. E. F. Turner and Mr. Frank Williams, and solos upon the violin and violoncello were successfully contributed by Miss Elsie Owen and Mr. Ivor James respectively.

Mr. Harold Harold's annual orchestral and choral concert took place on June 1 at Kensington Town Hall. The feature of the evening was the rendering of Hamish MacCunn's 'Bonny Kilmeny' by the Kensington Presbyterian Choral Society. The soloists were Miss Alice Moffat, Mr. James Horncastle and Mr. Bevington Rosse. The orchestra was led by Mr. Oakley Parrott, and Mr. Harold Harold conducted. The miscellaneous part of the programme included three new dances for orchestra—'Dance of the maids of honour,' 'Dance of the feathers,' and 'Dance of the pigmies'—composed by Harold Jenner, and two manuscript songs by the same composer—'Storm on the moor' and 'The Rook village'—sung by Mr. Harold Harold. Mr. Rohan Clensy (violinist) and Mr. Frank Mummery (pianist) assisted.

The Lewisham Choral Society gave a successful performance of the first two parts of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' on June 2, at the Blackheath Concert Hall. The choir, with the assistance of Miss Ada Forrest, Mr. Alfred Heather and Mr. Harry Dearth in the solo parts, sang with intelligence and finish under the conductorship of Mr. Frank Idle. The playing of the orchestra was also a feature of the performance. The second part of the programme included 'It comes from the misty ages' the choral epilogue from Elgar's 'Banner of St. George,' and Elgar's 'Chanson de Nuit' and 'Chanson de Matin' by the orchestra.

The performance of Shakespeare's 'Midsummer Night's Dream' by the students of the London Academy of Music at the Hampstead Conservatoire on June 16 and 18, claims attention here on account of the excellence of the musical arrangements. The whole of Mendelssohn's music was performed, the overture and entr'actes being played as a pianoforte duet by Miss Fanny Graeff and Miss Gertrude Steed, the Wedding march being played on the organ by Miss Dorothy Pyman. Miss Esther Jaye was responsible for the melodrama accompaniments and Miss Annie Evans for those of the choruses. The latter were sung by the Operatic Choir, the solo parts by Miss Gertrude Walton and Miss Dorothy Mason. The music was under the able direction of Mr. Carl Weber and Mr. Henry Beauchamp. The acting of the play, under the experienced management of Mr. Charles Fry, was intelligent and admirable, and the entire performance reflected great credit upon the students and the Directors of the institution.

Musical Competition Festivals.

FARNHAM (SURREY). May 5 and 27.

This festival has peculiarly pleasant features, inasmuch as there is so much friendly feeling amongst all concerned. Mr. Morton Latham exerts almost patriarchal sway, and brings his great musical experience and fine taste to shape the details of the scheme.

The first day was for the juniors, and the results illustrated the excellence of the teaching. The children combined to sing the cantata 'The Luck of Edenhall' (Sydney H.

Nicholson), under Mr. Latham

On the second day the adult choirs competed. Dr. H. Walford Davies adjudicated. The Kingsley choir gained several successes in various classes, and the choirs from Aldershot and Farnham were also prize-winners. A performance of 'The Messiah,' under Mr. Latham's direction, united the 240 voices. The audiences throughout were good.

BURY (LANCASHIRE). May 7, 8 and 9.

The third annual festival was held as above with success. There were entries in thirty-one of the forty-one classes provided for in the schedule. The principal results were as follows:

Female-Voice Choirs: Tests, 'The snow' (Elgar), 'Spinning chorus' ('Flying Dutchman') (Wagner). 1, New Road (Mr. G. Webb), Male-Voice Choirs: Tests, 'From the sea' (MacDowell), and 'Give a rouse' (Bantock). 1, Goodshaw Glee Union (Mr. B. Peel). Choral Societies: Tests, 'My dearest love' (Sweeting), and 'Hunting song' (Benedict). 1, Rochdale Temperance (Mr. T. E. Kershaw).

The adjudicators were Dr. Sinclair and Mr. R. J. Forbes.

FRIS CROIL.

This twelfth Irish annual musical festival was held in Dublin on May 18 and following days. The entries for the solo competitions totalled 361, and for the ensemble 110, a considerable increase upon the numbers of 1907; moreover, the festival just concluded evoked more interest and enthusiasm than for some years past, a fact which is full of encouragement for the future.

The prizes in the choral competitions were awarded as follows, Dr. A. H. Mann, of Cambridge, being the

adjudicator:

Division I. (Chief Choral Competition). Mixed-Voice Choirs (4 entries).

1st, Amphion Choir, Dublin (conductor, Mr. George B. White); 2nd, Male-Voices (two entries). 1st, Archbishop McHale Gaelic League Choir (conductor, Mr. Peter P. Walsh).

Female Voices (3 entries). 1st, Brian Boru Gaelic League Choir (conductor, Mr. W. McGouran): 2nd, Emmet Choir (conductor, Mr. W. McGouran): 2nd, Emmet Choir (conductor, Mr. School Choirs (2 entries). 1st, Gardiner Street Convent School (conductor, Miss E. Gorman).

Division Va. School Choirs (3 entries). 1st, Donnybrook Mixed National School Choir (conductor, Mr. W. H. Nesbito); 2nd, North Strand School Choir (conductor, Mr. W. H. Nesbito); 2nd, North Strand School Choir (conductor, Mr. W. H. Nesbito).

The solo competitions attracted large attendances. The two new competitions in this class were the 'Plunket Greene Cup,' for interpretation, and the 'Denis O'Sullivan Memorial Medal,' for baritones, both of which were obtained by Mr. Percy Whitehead, who already holds the Feis Ceoil gold medal for solo-singing. Mr. E. Gordon Cleather was the adjudicator.

The Brass and Reed Band Competition, revived after being some years in abeyance, brought forward three entries. The first prize was won by 'Ireland's Own' band (conductor, Mr. Robert O'Dwyer), and the second prize by St. Kevin's School, Glencree (conductor, Mr. J. Delany). Mr. A. J. Dunn, B.M. 'Faugh-a-Ballaghs,' was the adjudicator.

ESKDALE (WHITBY). May 19, 20.

At this 'tournament of song' Dr. H. P. Allen was the adjudicator. The competitions included both vocal and instrumental classes, but the former attracted by far the larger number of entries. The first day was devoted to the children's competitions, for which there were a fair number of entries. During the afternoon competitions a choir of children from the schools of the neighbourhood sang Gaul's cantata 'The hare and the tortoise,' conducted by Mr. R. Parratt. The results in the choral competitions held on the second day were as follows:

Church Choirs (mixed voices): Test, 'The radiant morn' (Woodward).

1, Whitby; 2, Brunswick; 3, Sleights and Thorpe Wesleyan (equal).
Church Choirs (men and boys): Test, 'God, my King' (Bach).
1, Saltburn; 2, Brotton.
Village Choral Societies: Test, 'The red, red rose' (J. L. Hatton).
1, Brunswick; 2, Eskdale, Danby and Castleton (equal).
Ladies' Choirs: Test, 'The shepherd' (Walford Davies). 1, Brunswick; 2, Fylingdales; 3, Saltburn.
Male-Voice Choirs: Test, 'Warrior's song' (Hatton). 1, Brunswick; 2, Pickering.

2, Pickering. Choral Societies: Test, 'Break, break, break' (Macfarren). 1, Saltburn Glee Society; 2, Whitby Musical Union; 3, Fylingdales Choral Society.

BUXTON.

May 20, 21 and 22.

This festival, now in its second year, appeals mainly to those who dwell in North Derbyshire, but it adds some open classes. The town—being a well-known watering place and having considerable attractions, among which must be reckoned the handsome Pavilion in which the festival was held-forms a capital centre for a gathering of this kind. A strong committee, including some very active officers, managed the festival this year with conspicuous success. The tests for the thirty-nine classes were chosen generally with judgment in view of the musical resources available, but one or two erred on the side of difficulty.

A children's day attracted numerous entries and proved enjoyable alike to performers and audiences. A full report was given in The School Music Review for June. In the adult In the open solo-singing classes there were 132 entries. were 132 chities. In the open solo-singing classes the prize-winners were Miss Maude A. Ward (soprano), Miss M. A. Butt (contralto), Mr. W. A. Stark (tenor) and Mr. Joseph Richardson (bass).

The principal choral results were as follows:

Mixed-Voice Church and Chapel Choirs: Test, 'Sing a song of praise' (Stainer). 1, Chapel-en-le-Frith Wesleyan (Mr. W. Hall); 2, (equal), St. John's Baptist (Mr. G. C. Oldham) and Fairfield (Mr. C. Slater).

Male-Voice Choirs: Test-piece, 'The long day closes' (Sullivan). 1, Nottingham Glee and Madrigal (Mr. C. E. Riley); 2, Oldham House Choir, Matlock (Mr. L. G. Wildgoose).

Mixed-Voice Choirs (open): Tests, 'The battle of the Baltic' (Lloyd) and 'Water lilies' (Cowen). 1, Matlock P.M. (Mr. L. G. Wildgoose).

Mixed-Voice Choirs (Challenge Shield Class): Tests, 'There is music by the river' (Pinsuti). 1, Tideswell (Mr. Carl Ashover); 2, (bracketed) Buxton Philharmonic (Mr. G. H. Lockett) and Bradwell (Mr. G. Norman). (Mr. G. Norman).

The contest in the challenge shield choral class for local choirs was a very close one. The tests were the part-song 'There is music by the river' (Pinsuti), and any chorus selected by the judge from 'The Pied Piper' (Parry). Last year the shield was gained by the Buxton Philharmonic Society, but on this occasion it was won by Tideswell, chiefly on account of their fluent performance of the selected cantata excerpts. The whole work was afterwards performed by the three first choirs, under the direction of the conductor of the winning choir (Mr. Ashover).

The audiences varied in number considerably. Concerts were given every evening, the winners of the day providing an attractive programme. The adjudicators were Dr. McNaught, and Mr. G. H. Gregory, organist of Boston Parish Church. The able secretary of the festival is Mr. F. Gummer.

BERKS, BUCKS, AND OXON (HIGH WYCOMBE).

May 20, 21, 22 and 23.

This festival attracts an enormous number of competitors. It is held alternately in one of the three counties named. The chief choral results were as follows:

Ladies' Choir. Test, 'Be strong to hope, O heart' (unaccompanied) (Hecht). 1, Windsor (the Rev. Bernard Everett); 2, George Street Congregational, Oxford (Mr. H. E. W. Phillips). Choral Societies (open to the three counties). Test, 'Arise, awake.' 1, Windsor (Rev. B. Everett); 2, George Street Congregational, Oxford (Mr. H. E. W. Phillips); 3, High Wycombe (Mr. G. F. Andrews). Male-Voice Choirs. Test, 'Song of the Pedlar' (Lee Williams). 1, Linslade (Mr. G. W. Hedges); 2, Klang Gleemen, Oxford (Mr. H. E. W. Phillips).

E. W. Phillips).

E. W. Phillips).

(G. Molyneux Palmer). r, Henley (Mr. W. G. Bayley); 2, Rev. B. Everett's Choir, Windsor.

Ladies' Choirs (places under 2,000 inhabitants). Test, 'O swallow, swallow' (Von Holst). r, Watlington (Mr. Bertram Storer); 2, Goring and Streatley (Mr. Stepney Rawson).

Choral Societies (places under 2,500 inhabitants). Test, 'See the chariot at hand' (Horsley). r, Watlington (Mr. Bertram Storer); 2 (bracketed), Beaconsfield (the Rev. A. S. Commeline) and Goring and Streatley (Mr. Stepney Rawson).

Choral Societies (places under 1,000 inhabitants). Test, 'As torrents in summer' (Elgar). r, Brightwell (Mr. A. Holloway); 2, Saunderton Parish Church (the Rev. L. Packer).

There were remarkable entries in the school and junior It was computed that in the sixty entries no fewer than 1,600 children took part. Some of the singing was excellent, and the general average was very creditable alike to the ability of the children and to the skill of teachers. All the school classes had to submit to a sight-singing test, and here again there were evidences of sound teaching. entries and results are given in full in the July number of the School Music Review.

Performances of the melodious children's cantata 'Vogelweid' (George Rathbone), by two choirs of 800 voices each, were a strong feature of the festival. Among the successful schools at the competition were:

School Choir, British, Slough (Mr. A. W. Proctor); Thame (Mr. H. J. Webb); Datchet C.E. (Mr. E. Page); Crazies Hill (Miss Millburn); Kendrick Girls' School, Reading (Mr. P. Scrivener); Datchet King's Messengers (Mr. G. F. Britten).

The adjudicators were Dr. H. Walford Davies, Dr. R. Vaughan Williams, Mr. Henry Bird and Mr. Maurice Sons. The chief secretary of this complex organization is Mrs. Commeline, of Beaconsfield, Bucks.

WARRINGTON.

May 23.

The festival recently established here is making satisfactory progress. On the present occasion it secured the support and confidence of over one thousand competitors, including many excellent choirs. There were nearly 100 vocal soloists and fifty instrumentalists (violin and pianoforte). The chief choral results were as follows:

Male-Voice Choirs: Test, 'King of Worlds' (Dard Janin).
Manchester Orpheus (Mr. W. S. Nesbitt) was the only choir that sang.
Choral Societies, eight entries: Tests, 'He watching over Israel'
(Mendelssohn), and 'Moonlight' (Eaton Faning). 1, St. Helens;
2, Runcorn and Widnes. Both conducted by Mr. H. Berrey.
Church and Chapel Choirs, four entries: Test, Anthem 'Abide with me' (Dr. Dunstan). 1, Bold Street Wesleyan (Mr. F. Hickman). All the singing in this class was particularly good.

The adjudicators were Dr. McNaught, Mr. Wilfrid Jones and Miss Backsheen Wood. Mr. A. H. Crosfield, M.P., and Mrs. Crosfield distributed the prizes.

LYTHAM, LANCASHIRE.

May 27 to 30.

The festival influentially organized in this charming locality has made rapid progress, and this year it was found necessary to extend the period to four days. The resident gentry have realized that the event is an absorbingly interesting one, and they very readily subscribed for all the seating accommodation afforded by the Pier Pavilion. Many persons who came from a considerable distance were, to their great disappointment, refused admission. The demand for a large assembly room for the use of the town generally has become so acute that it seems probable that steps will soon be taken to supply this much needed accommodation.

The first day was confined to local resources and brought forward many excellent results, especially as to solo-singing, both junior and adult.

On the second day twenty-one contraltos sang the 'Slumber song' from Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio,' and Hugo Wolf's 'Secrecy'; eighteen sopranos sang the Gavotte from 'Mignon' (Ambroise Thomas), and 'Loreley' (Liszt); twenty baritones sang 'Son of mine' (Wallace) and 'Litany' (Schulett) transport of the second (Schubert); ten tenors sang 'In moonlight' (Elgar) and 'Adelaide' (Beethoven); and twelve pianists played 'Schmetterling' (Grieg). Six church and chapel choirs also competed, the tests being 'Call to remembrance' (Farrant) and 'Why do the roses' (Pearsall). The principal results were as follows:

Soprano solo: Miss Evelyn Tegg, Manchester.
Contralto solo: Miss Annie Armistead, Lancaster.
Tenor solo: Mr. J. T. Jackson, Nelson.
Baritone solo: Mr. Geo. Walmsley, Brierfield.
Pianoforte solo: Miss Vida Whittaker, Blackpool.
Church and Chapel Choirs: 1, United Methodist, Blackpool
(Mr. J. S. Warburton); 2, Rawcliffe Street Wesleyan, South Shore
(Mr. John T. Schofield).

The third day was for the children. The entries included 51 pianists, 4 violinists, 35 solo-singers, 7 action-song parties, and 3 school choirs. The solo-singing of both girls and boys was of a very high standard. The audience was boys was or a very nigh standard. The audience was obviously repeatedly touched by some of the deeply expressive performances of the beautiful song 'At night' (Randegger) by the girls, and the not less attractive 'May song' (Mendelssohn) by the boys. The school-choir singing was also excellent, but the highest results were attained when the Revue and Claremont (Blackmon) schools emblined to standard. Revoe and Claremont (Blackpool) schools combined to sing 'A garland of songs' (Set 1), under the baton of Dr. McNaught, who adjudicated throughout the festival. The tone, enunciation and notably the expression deserve to be described as exquisite, and created a deep impression upon the large audience. Action-songs in this part of Lancashire are remarkably well got up. They are miniature plays, and are staged with astonishing completeness and skill. On this occasion they were as attractive as they have ever been at festivals of this kind.

The final day was devoted to 'open' classes. Ten mixedvoice and five male-voice quartets, nine small and five large male-voice choirs, and five mixed-voice choirs sang. Many of the best small choral organizations in the North-west district were attracted. The chief results were as follows:

Small Male-Voice Choirs: Tests, 'Soldier, rest' (Oliver King) and 'O, my love's like a red, red rose' (Brewer). 1, The Owls, St. Helens (Dr. S. B. Siddall): 2, Preston Lyric (Mr. Joseph Smith); 3, Ashton-under-Lyne (Mr. James Hardy). Mixed-Voice Choirs: Tests, 'O, lovely May '(Brahms), 'The silver swan (Gibbons), and 'Song of the flax-spinner' (Leslie). 1, Accrington (Mr. E. Whittaker); 2, Fleetwood Glee and Madrigal (Mr. E. B. Meadows); 3, Claremont Congregational, Blackpool (Mr. H. Whittaker). Large Male-Voice Choirs: Tests, 'Hymn before action' (Walford Davies), 'Whether I find thee' (Elgar), and 'The Word went forth' (accompanied) (Mendelssohn). 1, Habergham Glee Union (Mr. E. Hitchon); 2, Burnley Co-Operative (Mr. Dan Duxbury); 3, Manchester Orpheus (Mr. W. S. Nesbitt).

The adjudicators, besides Dr. McNaught, were Mr. Harry Evans and Mr. W. McNaught. Mr. Vivian Jackson and Mr. T. S. Warburton were official accompanists, Mr. J. B. Crook, the chairman, is a potent force, and Mr. Allan Willer. Wilson, the secretary, brings great business skill to bear upon his arduous work.

St. Cecilia's Singing Competition.

June 16, 17.

This is for Working Girls' Clubs in London. gathering took place in the Passmore Edwards Settlement. Seventeen choirs competed in two classes. The School for Singers from South Belgravia, under Miss Eastwood, gained the first prize in one section and St. Edward's, Soho, under Mr. Holmes, that for the other and more advanced section. All choirs had to sing at sight as well as to prepare a number of pieces. Dr. McNaught adjudicated.

Schumann's 'Pilgrimage of the Rose' was performed by the St. Catharine's College Musical Society, Cambridge, in the College Hall, on June 15, under the conductorship of the Rev. W. T. Southward.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

Vienna, June 15, 1908.

During the last week in May came a visiting company of Italian singers, of whom great things were expected; opinion, however, was divided as to the result. The prima donna declined at the last moment to sing, so that Fraulein Kurz, our chief coloratura vocalist, had to take the principal female rôles; thus the interest in the scheme rapidly diminished. Bonci, the tenor, had long been known here by his excellent performances. The baritone, Ancona, met with little success as Don Juan; on the other hand, Pini-Corsi, both as an actor and a singer, proved a brilliant Leporello. A performance of Verdi's 'Rigoletto' brought forward the baritone Nani and the bass Bettoni, both skilful actors, whose style of singing, however, was not sympathetic. Puccini's 'Bohème' was the most successful of the performances, for which very high charges for admission were made.

On May 19 the recently appointed French ambassador, M. Philippe Crozier, arranged a memorable evening concert. The rooms and bureaux of the Embassy have been for years in the palace belonging to the Lobkowitz family, and it is rich in souvenirs; but soon a move will be made to a new building. As a farewell to the old quarters of the Embassy, M. Crozier, with the co-operation of the orchestra of the Hofoper, gave a Beethoven evening. It is known that the composer wrote his 'Eroica' in honour of Napoléon Buonaparte, but tore up the dedication when he learned that the bold Corsican had placed the imperial crown on his head. The dedication was then bestowed on Prince Lobkowitz, Beethoven's noble-minded patron, who arranged a first performance of the work in his palace. In the same room, a handsome marble hall, resounded again, after a hundred years, the mighty tones of the symphony. To this worthy memorial festival M. Crozier invited the élite of Viennese society, and entertained them in brilliant style. In addition to the symphony the programme included the 'Prometheus' overture, the overture and march from the Ruins of Athens' and the Violin romance in F, with Rosè as the soloist.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The successful three weeks' Promenade concerts at the Theatre Royal terminated on Saturday, June 6, with a plébiscite programme, which included two movements from Tchaikovsky's fourth Symphony, Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' suite, Landon Ronald's 'A birthday overture,' the 'Tannhäuser' and 'William Tell' overtures, in addition to two movements from Max Bruch's Violin concerto in G minor, finely played by Mr. Max Mossel, the director of the concerts. Mr. Landon Ronald, who has conducted throughout the season, and who was the recipient of an ovation, announced amidst cheers that the Promenade concerts would be continued next year.

The Royal Society of Artists' musical matinées were brought to a close on June 13, when Mr. Oscar Pollack directed his 340th concert. As hitherto, a great number of new vocalists and instrumentalists were given a hearing who otherwise would have found it difficult to secure an appearance.

MUSIC AT CAMBRIDGE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT,)

As is usual in the summer term, the chronicler has but few concerts to notice. The University Musical Society gave a performance in Trinity College on May 16. The principal items of the programme were Haydn's Symphony in D, and Debussy's 'Danse sacrée et danse profane,' the original harp part being supplied by the planoforte, according to the published version. Mr. E. J. Dent conducted. The concert on June 12 was one of the best in the long history of the Society. Dr. Gray conducted, and the chief attraction was Miss Marie Hall, who played Brahms's Violin concerto in a manner which fully entitled her to rank among the great interpretative players of the day. She also gave Saint-Saëns's Rondo Capriccioso, and her reception after both pieces was enthusiastic. The choir contributed Goetz's beautiful cantata 'Noenia,' so unaccountably neglected in these days, and Vaughan Williams's 'Toward the unknown region.' The latter work, conducted by the composer, made a deep impression. The programme was completed by 'Finlandia and the overture to 'Die Verkaufte Braut.'

Dr. Mann conducted a performance of Beethoven's Mass in D, in 'King's' Chapel, on June 16. Considering the stupendous difficulties of the work the performance was a fine one. The soloists, Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Phillis Lett, Mr. Alfred Heather and Mr. R. Radford, deserve praise, as does Mr. W. H. Reed for his playing of the violin obbligato in the Benedictus. Of College concerts, those at St. John's and King's were the most noticeable. A striking 'Coronach,' composed by Mr. Cyril B. Rootham, appeared in both programmes, and 'King's' concert also included a set of part-songs by Dr. Gray.

About twenty-five years ago a movement was started in Cambridge for the erection of a statue of Orlando Gibbons in this his native town. As the funds received were, however, entirely inadequate for carrying out this object, it is now proposed, with the consent of the surviving subscribers, to invest the money in hand, and to apply the income towards supplementing the Pendlebury Library in the Fitzwilliam Museum. Any music so purchased will be specially bound, and the name of Orlando Gibbons will be stamped on the cover. The income, though small, will still be a welcome addition to the means available for augmenting our University collections of music.

At the installation of the Chancellor on June 17, the only musical feature was the performance of a march specially written for the occasion by the Professor of Music, Sir Charles Stanford. This proved to be an ingenious and effective work, not at all like the conventional march, but specially interesting to Cambridge residents owing to the use of the 'Cambridge' chimes and many references to the composer's 'Eumenides' music. The march was played by the band of the Royal Engineers, conducted by their bandmaster, Mr. Neville Flux.

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The first concert of the summer term took place on May 14 in the Town Hall, under the auspices of the Musical Club, when the Kruse Quartet gave an excellent selection of chamber music. The programme included Schubert's Quartet in A minor (Op. 29), and Dvorák's Quartet in E flat (Op. 51), the string players being subsequently joined by Mr. Draper (clarinet) in Mozart's Chief of the Mr. Draper (clarinet) in Mozart's chief of the Mr. Draper (clarinet) in Mozart's chief of the Mr. Draper (clarinet) in Mozart's chief of the Mr. Draper (clarinet) and the Mr. Draper (clarine Quintet (K. 581) for that favourite instrument and strings. Prof. Kruse played as a solo Tartini's Violin sonata in D.

Mention can only be made of the more important College concerts which took place during the 'Eights Week.' Balliol made a good start on May 24, when Beethoven's everwelcome Septet (Op. 20) and Schubert's Pianoforte quintet (Op. 114) were played by Mr. Alfred Gibson and his worthy confrères.

A good concert followed on May 26 at 'Exeter,' but this year the absence of an orchestra is much to be regretted. Somervell's cantata, 'The forsaken merman' was well rendered, as also were several part-songs by Elgar, notably 'It's oh! to be a wild wind.' Mr. Herbert Bagnall gave a charming rendering of Handel's air 'Where'r you walk,' an excellent accompanist being found in Mr. F. Cunningham Woods. Mr. C. E. Winn, the organ Scholar, conducted.

on the following evening 'Keble' gave a concert, its most notable feature being the excellent playing of the orchestra, consisting of local string players and 'wind' from London and elsewhere. Mendelssohn's 'Italian' Symphony, Beethoven's 'Prometheus' and Weber's 'Euryanthe' overtures were included in the scheme, while the Vocal Society, assisted by ladies for the source and also parts again to the source and also parts again. On the following evening 'Keble' gave a concert, its most ladies for the soprano and alto parts, sang several madrigals with capital effect, especially 'Fire, fire my heart' (Morley),

'Flora gave me fairest flowers (Wilbye), and 'The silver swan' (Gibbons). Mr. Zulueta sang charmingly several songs, including Handel's 'Droop not, young lover,' and Parry's 'And yet I love her till I die.' Mr. H. G. Ley, the organ Scholar, proved a good conductor, and the whole concert was very enjoyable.

The last concert of the 'Eights' took place at Queen's on May 29, when the programme included Dr. C. H. Lloyd's 'Longbeards' Saga,' for which a good performance was secured under the composer's direction, and a new cantata, entitled 'Agincourt,' composed expressly for the concert by Mr. Myles B. Foster. This work, which also had the advantage of the composer's baton, went exceedingly well for a first performance. Mr. Mercer contributed three of Stanford's 'Cavalier songs' and Mr. Joseph Reed gave a capital rendering of 'Onaway, awake,' by Coleridge-Taylor, while the orchestra, under the baton of Mr. G. G. Stocks, gave a fair account of Mozart's G minor Symphony.

Speech day at Christ's Hospital, West Horsham, took place on June 13, when, according to the custom, the proceedings opened with a short service in the School chapel, attended by the Lord Mayor and the Sheriffs of London in State. The singing at this service was particularly good, especially that of the Te Deum to Dr. F. Huntley's setting in E flat. In the afternoon the speeches were delivered in the big School, the great building being filled to overflowing. As on previous occasions the music proved a very attractive feature. As the Lord Mayor's procession entered the Hall, a march from Handel's 'Rinaldo,' arranged for two cornets, three trombones and organ, was played. The chief item in the programme was Parry's 'Ode to Music,' performed by a choir of 114 voices and accompanied by a full orchestra. A very fine rendering of the work was given, and this was particularly praiseworthy as, with eight exceptions-three vocal and five instrumental performers—the entire choir and orchestra was composed of boys and masters of the School. Mr. H. B. Dickin, was Jackson Byles led the orchestra, and Mr. R. Wilkinson, organist and music master of the School, conducted. Later the orchestra played Grieg's 'Huldigungsmarsch' ('Sigurd Jorsalfar') and the choir sang an unaccompanied part-song, 'The shepherd's song' composed by Thomas Brewer, a music master of Christ's Hospital in the 17th century. At the conclusion of the speeches the School band, under the baton of Mr. Bampton, bandmaster, played in the quadrangle.

An entertainment of much variety and charm was given at the Hampstead Conservatoire in the afternoon and evening of June 20 by Miss Nellie Chaplin, entitled 'Ancient dances and music.' These included a Pavane, Galliard, Chaconne, Tarantelle, Suite of old English dances, and a series of Dances of which a Courante (from Playford's 'Dancing Master') and a Sarabande (by Destouches) were particularly pleasing. The Suite of old English dances taken from Playford's 'Dancing Master,' the melodies harmonized by Mr. Charles Salaman, Mr. A. H. D. Prendergast and Mr. W. Wolstenholme, were of great interest, and gave an impression of a village festival in the days of 'Merrie England.' The dances, some of them vocally accompanied, were executed with much grace by a number of young ladies, the Tarantelle (by Miss Muriel Ridley) and Sarabande (by Miss Beatrice Lake) being given with the necessary abandon. The players were Misses Kate and Mabel Chaplin, Lilian Berger, Maud Foster-Evans and Leila Bull; and Miss Nellie Chaplin played three solos on a fine old Kirkman harpsichord (1789) with much skill. The historical and descriptive notes, read by Mr. F. Cunningham Woods at the commencement and in the intervals between the dances, added to the interest of the occasion. The charm of this old-world music was undeniable and much appreciated by crowded audiences.

The monument at Leipzig to John Sebastian Bach, by the sculptor Charles Seffner, was inaugurated on Sunday, May 24. It is erected on the site of the old St. Thomas cemetery.

Mr. Herbert F. Ellingford, of Belfast, has recently obtained the degree of Bachelor of Music at the University of Oxford.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

Correspondents are particularly requested to enclose a programme when forwarding reports of concerts.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either prepared from local newspapers or furnished by correspondents.

ABERAVON.—An orchestral concert was given by the Port Talbot and Aberavon Orchestral Society in the New Grand Hall on May 28, when the programme included Beethoven's Symphony No. 2, in D, Leutner's 'Fest Overture,' German's three 'Nell Gwyn' dances, the ballet music from Gounod's 'Faust,' Mendelssohn's 'Cornelius' march, and an Orchestral Suite by the conductor, Mr. Walter Whittaker. The vocalists were Miss Ethel Lister and Mr. Ivor Foster. The orchestra was led by Mr. J. W. Duys, and Mr. J. E. R. Teague was solo violoncellist.

BROMLEY (KENT).—The annual choir festival at Widmore Mission Church, on Ascension Day, opened with Berthold Tours's 'Festival Ode.' The choir, accompanied by an orchestra of strings, sang the Ode with spirit and fervour, under the conductorship of Mr. A. M. Thomas.

CHESTER.—The second and third parts of Gounod's 'Redemption' were excellently performed at St. Paul's Church on Whitsunday evening at the close of the service, with augmented choir and an orchestra of thirty performers, led by Mr. R. Beaumont. Miss Mary Langdon and Messrs. A. E. Ward and Red were the solo vocalists, Mr. R. Thomas presided at the organ, and Mr. W. H. Churton, choirmaster, conducted.

CHOLSEY.—The Choral Society gave a concert on May 27, when Bridge's choral ballad 'The Inchcape Rock' was performed, with the assistance of a string band. The second part of the programme included two unaccompanied partsongs—'Silent night' (Barnby), and 'There sits a bird' (Hill). The conductor was Mr. T. H. Hill.

CROWBOROUGH.—The Musical Society concluded its season with a successful performance of Handel's 'Samson.' The admirable manner in which all the choruses were rendered reflected much credit on the conductor, Mr. E. Grimm; a word of praise is also due to the orchestra of the Society. The solo vocalists were Miss Dorothy Cook-Smith, Miss Emilie Owen, Mr. Harry Stubbs and the Rev. A. A. Jackson.

DUNGON.—The Glasgow Select Choir gave two most successful concerts in the Pavilion on June 13, the principal work performed on both occasions being the choral ballad 'Young Lochinvar' by Dr. A. Davidson Arnott. The choir seemed to exceed even its usual standard of excellence, and, with the orchestral accompaniment, the work was sung with great spirit under the baton of the composer, who is also the conductor of the Choir.

EDINBURGH.—Miss Chrystal, violinist, assisted by Mr. Thomas Meux, vocalist, gave a recital in Queen's Hall, on June 11, in aid of the Edinburgh Women Students' Union. Miss Chrystal displayed fine tone and great executive ability in her renderings of pieces by Handel, Wagner-Wilhelmj, Vieuxtemps and Max Bruch, and Mr. Meux, who possesses a baritone voice of wide range and resonant quality, was highly successful in several groups of songs by various composers. Both artists were fortunate in having the support of so sympathetic and artistic an accompanist as Miss Mabel Barrons.

Grahamstown.—Mr. Percy Ould gave an interesting concert on May 5, when he played Mendelssohn's Violin concerto, accompanied by Mrs. Streatfeild, Schubert's 'Rondeau brillant' in conjunction with Mrs. W. Deane, and various other pieces, accompanied by Mrs. Ould, in each case displaying remarkable technique and expression. Mrs. W. Deane played Chopin's Allegro de Concert and Nocturne in D flat. The vocalists were Mrs. Cutmore and Mr. Bernard Streatfeild.—The inaugural meeting of the Grahamstown Musical Union took place in the Junior Common Room at Rhodes University on May 14, when a large number of new members were enrolled, and a varied programme was provided by Mr. and Mrs. Ould, Mr. and Mrs. Streatfeild and others.

NEWBURY.—At St. Bartholomew's Grammar School, on 'Speech Day,' June 15, the proceedings commenced with a performance of the first two scenes of Elgar's 'Banner of St. George.' Some forty boys, with the assistance of about a dozen ladies and gentlemen (some of the latter being 'Old Boys'), took part, and the work was well rendered under the direction of the music master, Mr. Andrew Freeman. Words and music are of the kind that appeal to boys, and they entered into the spirit of the work with enthusiasm, the battle scene especially being sung con amore.

Norwich.—The members of the Norwich Orchestral Union gave a concert at the Victoria Rooms, St. Stephen's, on May 28, under the conductorship of Mr. Ernest Harcourt. The principal feature of the programme was a selection from Spohr's 'Last Judgment' the solo vocalists being Miss Edith Balls, Mr. A. F. J. Furness, Mr. H. Luckett and Mr. W. R. Laws.

PRRSTATYN.—A very successful performance of Handel's oratorio 'Samson' was given in the Town Hall on May 21 by the Choral Society. The choir sang with spirit, and reflected credit on the conductor, Mr. G. W. Jones. The orchestra was led by Mr. Horace Haselden, and Mr. G. A. Charlton presided at the organ. The principal vocalists were Madame Sadler-Fogg, Miss Florence Jones, Mr. D. Ellis, Mr. Charles James and Mr. Frank Nicholson.

Answers to Correspondents.

- A. F.—(1) There is a short biography, by Mrs. Newmarch, of Rachmaninoff and a list of his works in the new edition of 'Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' vol. iv., p. 11; and of Mr. Charles Macpherson in Brown and Stratton's 'British Musical Biography.' (2) The two sacred fanes you mention will probably be included in our series of illustrated articles on cathedrals. (3) We do not know of an arrangement of Mendelssohn's organ sonatas for pianoforte solo.
- J. D. L.—The instrument about which you enquire is a harp-lute, invented by E. Light. Several specimens are yearly offered for sale by Messrs. Puttick & Simpson and, if nicely decorated in black and gold, they fetch about £2 each. The harp-lute is an echo of the pseudo-classicism of the Directoire and Empire periods. It has nothing in common with the lute, and the form of the instrument is to some extent modelled on the ancient lyre.

GRATEFUL.—The following are the authors of treatises on harmony written in the French language: Barbereau, Bazin, Catel, Cherubini, Dubois, Durand, Fenaroli, Fétis, Grast, Kastner, Keutzer, Lavignac, Lemoine, Loquin and Reicha. Of these, Loquin's 'l'Harmonie rendue claire,' Reicha's 'Traité d'Harmonie,' Durand's 'Traité d'Harmonie,' and Dubois's 'Etudes d'Harmonie' will probably meet your requirements.

- G. A. H.—The Elgar festival was held in Covent Garden Theatre with fair musical effect; and some of the finest choral performances ever heard in this country have been given on the stage of the theatre of the Winter Gardens at Blackpool, on the occasion of the annual Competition Festival. If the choir be placed well forward on the stage the sound will be less liable to be lost.
- C. B. D.—You will find that the three volumes of 'The Cathedrals of England and Wales' (T. Werner Laurie), by Mr. T. Francis Bumpus, would be a useful and interesting addition to your library on that particular subject. See a review article on his 'London Churches: ancient and modern,' on p. 448 of our present issue.
- C. C.—(1) You might follow Stainer's 'Organ' primer with Archer's 'The organ,' a theoretical and practical treatise on the instrument; (2) See 'Original studies and arrangements for the harmonium or American organ,' by King Hall (Novello), and Stainer's book on the American organ (Metzler).

- E. H. O.—The office and committee rooms of the Welsh National Eisteddfod, to be held in London next year, are at 63, Chancery Lane, where any official can be addressed by letter. The general secretaries are Mr. W. E. Davies and Mr. D. R. Hughes.
- C. A. P.—Will not your Alma mater help you in getting the 'visiting post' you seek? We are under the impression that application is frequently made to the authorities there for teachers, and your 'very good testimonials' ought certainly to help you.
- W. S. M.—(1) Chopin's Impromptu in A flat (Op. 29) may be played at about minim = 80. (2) It is not so much speed in the playing of pedal scales at an organ examination that will gain you marks, but clearness, neatness, and certainty of touch.
- E. F.—We can only suggest that you should write to the managers of some good hydropathic establishments, asking them if they can entertain your proposal to entertain their customers.
- E. J. S.—An analysis by Sir George Macfarren of Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES in the issues of January to April (inclusive), 1870.

COUNTERPOINT.—Judging from the papers set last year, counterpoint in not more than four parts is required for the Fellowship examination of the Royal College of Organists.

B. W. D.—We are afraid that the volumes of music you mention are not of any great intrinsic value. If only they were of the 15th century!

E. R. C.—So far as we can discover, the firm of 'Delamere & Co., London,' pianoforte manufacturers, appears to be extinct.

NOVELLO'S COLLECTION

Crown 8vo, 822 pp., cloth, red edges, 5s. Red Basil and red edges, 7s. 6d. Appendix only, paper cover, 1s.

This Book, which now contains the words of about 2000 Anthems, besides being admirably adapted for the use of Choirs and Congregations, for which purpose it was originally compiled, will be found most valuable to Organists, Choirmasters, and the Clergy as a BOOK OF REFERENCE FOR THE SELECTION OF ANTHEMS SUITABLE FOR SPECIAL DAYS, SEASONS, OR OCCASIONS, the Indexes having been considerably enlarged. It also contains a list of Anthems suitable for Men's Voices, and Anthems with Latin words.

The newly incorporated Anthems (Nos. 1590 to 1952) have been added to the former edition by means of an Appendix, which is published separately from the complete work. Consequently Choirs and Congregations which are still using the older edition are enabled to supplement their books, and make them complete, by purchasing the Appendix at the price of

One Shilling.

THE PARISH CHURCH ANTHEM BOOK

Crown 8vo, 250 pp., and 80 pp. of Indexes, cloth, red edges.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

This Anthem Book is the outcome of a desire on the part of many parish churches for a COLLECTION OF WORDS of convenient size, permanent in character, representative as to selection, and moderate in price. It contains the Words of printed in extenso; and many more are incorporated by means of reference letters. The Selection is prepared alphabetically, according to the names of the chief composers, and is so arranged that various settings by other composers of the same words, or of portions of them, may be used.

Messrs. Novello's collection of "Words of Anthems" has been used as a basis in the compilation of this work, but many anthems have been added, both ancient and modern, which have not been previously published in a Standard Form.

TECHNIQUE

EXPRESSION

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful-to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of progress.

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et catera.

"The studies are quite as entertaining to the listener as they are serviceable to the performer."—Musical Opinion.

"Six clever and useful 'Octave Studies.' They are more than usually interesting."—Musical Standard.

"Excellent for practice."-Christian World.

"They afford a very complete course of study. The different numbers are tuneful and attractive, and the variety is great."— The different The Lady.

"Almost every branch of octave-playing is represented in these tuneful studies."—Church Bells.

"These studies are very melodious, and will make the irksome study of octaves quite interesting to the hard-working student.—Church Family Newspaper.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

EDITED, ARRANGED IN GROUPS, AND THE FINGERING REVISED AND SUPPLEMENTED

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THIS Collection of Studies is intended to illustrate the various elements of a complete course of pianoforte technique, and to provide students with the means of attacking and overcoming the different special difficulties which have to be encountered. With this view, the Studies have been arranged in groups, those in each group being placed in progressive order, and having reference to some one particular difficulty. The greater part of the studies themselves have been selected from the standard works of the most eminent Study-writers, and with these are included numerous others, which, though of equally great practical utility, have hitherto been less generally accessible.

FROM THE ABOVE:

SELECTED PIANOFORTE STUDIES

PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THE present collection of studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most beneficial.

The Studies are grouped in two Sets, and are so arranged that the different Books in which they are contained may be taken in consecutive order, but pupils who are already further advanced than the elementary stage represented by Set I. may commence at once with Set II., which will be found to be complete in itself, and to illustrate all the essential elements of technique.

Where additional studies are desired, or studies on certain subjects which are not touched upon in this series, the larger collection, published under the title of "Progressive Studies" (from which the present examples have been selected), is of course available.

IN TWO SETS (EIGHT BOOKS), PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH BOOK.

A Modern School for the Violin

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" will consist of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.-STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on.

PIECES.

In completion of the scheme of "A Modern School" a large number of Pieces will be published, in a form designed to fulfil the requirements of Violin Teachers and Students. In each number the Violin part will be furnished with complete Fingerings and Bowings, besides remarks as to the methods of rendering, &c.

These Pianoforte Studies have been highly praised by M. Vladimir de Pachmann, who has expressed his intention of playing some of them during his Recital Tour in the United States. His testimonial is published with the Work, which consists of Twelve Numbers, apecially designed to develop power and skill in the fourth and fifth fingers. The importance of trying to equalize these weaker fingers with the stronger ones is unquestionable, as defective execution is more often traceable to this inequality of the fingers than to any other cause.

A HANDBOOK

EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

600 OUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS

ERNEST A. DICKS, Fellow of the Royal College of Organists.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found extremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that ascript.

Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, London, Dublin, Durham, and Edinburgh, and the Victoria University; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or commendation. commendation.

PREFACE TO THE SEVENTH EDITION.

Through the kindness of Dr. E. H. Turpin the seventh edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music includes the latest type of Papers set by Trinity College of Music, London, in their scheme of Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge.

The work will also be found to have been considerably enlarged by the second of the control of th

The work will also be found to have been considerably enlarged by the addition of fifty specimen questions, with answers. They have been designed for the most part after the manner of those set in the Theory Paper for the L.R.A.M. Diploma, and also that required by candidates for the Higher Practical Examinations held by Trinity College of Music, London. The author earnestly hopes that these additions will considerably enhance the value of the Handbook, and render it increasingly helpful to students.

THE CHOIRBOY'S GUIDE THE CATHEDRAL PSALTER

EDITED AND ARRANGED BY

ERNEST NEWTON.

This little book has been compiled mainly for the use of choirboys, and, therefore, nothing has been inserted but what is absolutely necessary for understanding the pointing of the Psalms as arranged in the Cathedral Psalter.

A certain amount of information has been given for the guidance of the Choirmaster, but the principal part of the book consists in the sets of exercises which have been arranged to lead the choirboys, step by step, through the various divisions of syllables that occur in the chanting of the Psalms.

After careful examination of the Cathedral Psalter, it has been found that there are exactly fifteen ways of dividing these syllables.

As the Recitation Notes are well within the compass of Alto, Tenor, and Bass voices, the book can be used with equal advantage by all members of a choir.

Price Ninepence.

SCORE-READING EXERCISES

EMILY R. DAYMOND, D.Mus., Oxon.

This book is the outcome of a request made some time ago to the author to write some examples of Exercises in Score-Reading similar to those imposed as tests in the examination for F. R. C. O.

These Exercises (forty-eight in number) comprise two sets of twenty-four examples, each set containing one example in every key, major and minor. The first and easier set is intended to prepare the way for the second, which is of greater complexity.

The author has endeavoured to provide a certain amount of variety both in style and in difficulty, and it is hoped that the Exercises will be of use to candidates for the F.R.C.O. Examination and also to other students who wish to become proficient in Score-Reading.

BREITKOPF & HÄRTEL-NEW PART-SONGS

DANMOON ORANIATIR WORLD BY BUILDING A STATE OF THE STATE		d.
BANTOCK, GRANVILLE. "The Inchcape Rock." Choral Ballad for male voices "A wonderfully clever work which, however, can only be tackled by a first-class party of singers. A study of this setting goes to show what a marvellous diversity of effects can be produced within such a limited scope by a really fine composer. There is nothing we have seen of Mr. Bantock's better than this. The work would probably require months of study to sing to perfection, but 'it is worth it."—Musical News.	0	10
BERGER, FEODOR. "The Hunter, the Rabbit and the Moon." Part-Song for men's voices.
Vocal Score	0	21/2
BRIAN, HAVERGAL. Rondel. "In a fairy boat." For four female voices	0	2
The powers of the human voice are very limited, as to the execution of intervals and as to figuration. Hence have arisen the difficulties of writing for unaccompanied voices, and also indirectly most of the existing rules for "part-writing" in Harmony books. When nearly half the compass is subtracted by using men's voices alone or female voices alone, the inelasticity of the vehicle is greatly increased, and it has been assumed that the style is incompatible with the most modern developments of composition. German writers have lately proved the contrary, and the present part-song shows an Englishman following successfully in the same steps. This piece can be strongly recommended both for novelty and beauty.
CUI, C. Op. 53-2. "Two Roses." Part-Song for mixed voices (S.A.T.B.). Vocal Score	О	3
This Franco-Russian composer (born 1835) has written various operas, e.g. "Le Prisonnier du Caucase" (1859), "William Ratcliff" (1888), and his chef d'œuvre "Angelo" (1876); with numerous pianoforte pieces, songs, part-songs, etc. His lyrical style is especially charming. Present specimen (D minor, with striking change to E flat for middle section) is highly effective. English words by P. L. Vallon. The same collection for mixed voices contains pieces by Bantock, Brian, Coleridge-Taylor, Cornelius (20), MacDowell, John E. West, and others.
REGER, MAX. Op. 39, No. 1, "Silence"; Op. 39, No. 2, "Evening Song"; Op. 39, No. 3, "The Dawn of Spring." Choruses for mixed voices (S.A.A.T.B.B.). English version by Edward
Oxenford. Vocal score each	0	3
SCHARWENKA, XAV. Op. 79. No. 2. "When Shadows flee away" (English version by Rev. Canon Gorton, M.A.), for 2 Tenors and 2 Basses. Vocal Score	0	2
This is an elegant piece by the Polish pianist-composer (born 1850), now resident in Berlin, English words by Canon Gorton. The same collection for male voices contains pieces by Bantock, Berger, Cornelius (15), Gade, Gambke, Schubert, Shapleigh, Weingartner, &c.
STRAUSS, RICHARD. Op. 34, No. 1. "Evening." A 16-part chorus, a capella	ī	0
Op. 34, No. 2. Hymn (Anthem). A 16-part chorus, a capella	1	6
Tallis's celebrated motet "Spem aliam non habui" was in 40 real parts, i.e., devoid of progression in unison or octaves; but it was little more than the prolongation of a single common chord. The present pieces are not in 16 real parts in the same sense, but are perhaps the most remarkable example extant of extreme modern harmony and progression being applied to a multiplicity of unaccompanied parts in an extended piece. They also introduce the composer of "Heldenleben" in quite a new light. Well executed, they will produce a great effect.

REGER-ORGAN

Reger's compositions for the Organ will always remain those creations of his that will assure him a unique place among contemporary composers; for, while all the others find their native element in symphonies and the music-drama, Reger (similar to Bruckner) starts from the organ and hence, naturally, from Bach. The significance of Reger's Organ Music lies in his solving the extraordinarily difficult problem of combining Bach's austerity and grandeur with the greatest modern mobility and multiformity of modulation: he has, as it were, translated Bach's language into "Modern High German," and made it a fit vehicle for conveying the most complicated trains of feeling and thinking of to-day. The words addressed by the 97 years old Adam Reinken in 1722 to J. S. Bach, and which were recently mentioned by Gustav Beckmann in an article about Reger, "I thought this art had died out, but now I see that it is living still in you," are to-day applicable to the 35 years old Reger. He has succeeded where since Bach no one, not even Liszt or Rheinberger, succeeded, or where they, at the most, succeeded only very rarely: he has made the Organ again the interpreter of the grandest ideas and sentiments; he has re-fashioned the crown of the Queen of instruments. That there are organists who have comprehended this in our own times, is proved by Karl Straube's example, who has been championing Reger's Organ Works for a long time with enthusiasm of word and deed. Others are doing the same. The most important of the exceedingly numerous compositions Reger has written for the Organ, are:—the great choral phantasias, Op. 30 ("Freu' dich sehr. O meine Seele"), 40 ("Wie schön leucht' uns der Morgenstern" and "Straf mich nicht in deinem Zorn"), and 52 ("Alle Menschen müssen sterben," "Wachet auf, ruft uns die Stimme," and "Halleluja! Gott zu loben, bleibe meine Seelenfreud'"), compositions of quite an inexhaustible wealth of sentiment and mood. These are joined by the powerful phantasia and fugue on the name B-A-C-H, Op. 46. One of Reger' this gigantic creation one can understand that Reger, as a composer for the Organ, has repeatedly been placed immediately

The Madrigal, one of the highest forms of vocal music, knows no national restrictions—Flanders, Italy, and England making a trio of countries where this art-form brilliantly flourished in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The Madrigals by English composers were not only of equal rank with those of other countries, but to England belongs the honour of having produced one of the finest collections ever made, that known as The Triumphs of Oriense, written in praise of Queen Elizabeth, and first published in London in 1601. Although 300 years have come and gone since this rich collection of Madrigals appeared, no modern reprint of the work in a cheap form has hitherto been issued. The present publication therefore attempts to supply this omission, and to place within the reach of all lovers of English choral music these splendid old masterpieces. In addition to The Triumphs of Oriense, other Madrigals by various Foreign and English composers will be included in the series and issued from time to time, thereby forming a large collection that should find acceptance by reason of its artistic worth and practical value.

ON ROYAL ROADS.

Pianists, like most other people, have been so often misled by so-called "royal roads" to success that they are apt to fall into the mistake of supposing that all such roads are fallacies. Strict investigation will, however, convince the most sceptical that in the matter of pianoforte technique the road to perfection, hitherto a dreary one, and on which the traveller was prone to get disheartened or lost, has now been levelled, straightened and made easy. The "royal road," as so many pupils term it, is the Macdonald Smith System - "From Brain to Keyboard." In the illustrated book "Light on Pianoforte Playing," which Mr. Macdonald Smith will send free to any pianist, the principles of his successful Postal Course are explained.

ROBIN OVERLEIGH

(BASS-BARITONE)

SPECIALLY ENGAGED FOR THE FIRST "TETRAZZINI" Tour, 1908.

THE TIMES.

May 14, 1908.

Mr. Robin Overleigh, who gave a vocal recital yesterday in Bechstein Hall, has a baritone voice of charming quality, and he has evidently been well trained. . . . His old French songs were phrased and delivered with distinct musical ability; Caccini's "Amarilli" was a good example of sustained singing, and Carissimi's "Vittoria" was brilliantly sung. . . . Walford Davies's "This ae nighte" was made duly impressive, however, and "I love the jocund dance" was so skilfully sung that it had to be repeated. A couple of songs by A. H. Brewer, Blow's "Self-Banished," and well-known songs by Bennett, Arthur Somervell, and Parry were also given, and the singer made a distinct success.

THE STANDARD.

May 14, 1908.

Praise is due to Mr. Robin Overleigh for presenting such an unconventional programme at his recital in Bechstein Hall yesterday afternoon, and also for his ability in sustaining the interest of a large audience to the very end. He uses his well-trained baritone voice effectively and with a good method of production. The tone is even throughout its range, and of a musical quality, but his singing of Caccini's "Amarilli" and Carissimi's "Vittoria" was expressive, and his phrasing artistic. His rendering of Brahms's songs was his best effort, as they were given with the dignified interpretation they need, and moreover it proved that he will be invaluable in oratorio. He was successful in two new songs by Dr. Herbert Brewer, sung with considerable charm of voice and style.

A VISIT TO PRESTON.

'A manufacturing town in Lancashire.' Such is the passing thought of the traveller as he beholds Preston from the railway carriage in journeying to the Lakes, or to Scotland. If, however, he tarry there awhile, he will find, upon a closer acquaintance with this great seat of the cotton industry, much to interest him and not a little to commend. Standing on an eminence, 120 feet above sea-level, overlooking the river Ribble and surrounded by pleasing scenery, Preston is beautiful for situation. Those grimy conditions which seem inseparable from manufacturing centres are scarcely observable, indeed, many a residential town might envy its three public parks, a trio of sylvan retreats charmingly laid out and yet not un-naturalised in Antiquity? Yes: in Athelstane's the process. reign (925-940) Amounderness, the hundred in which the place is situated, was granted to the known, but one took place in 1329. These Guild cathedral church of York; hence its chief town came to be known as Preston or 'priest's town.' Kingly favour? Yea, verily, to the extent of fourteen Royal Charters, covering a period of six in 1902. centuries, from that granted by Henry II. in 1179 St. John the Baptist, the celebration commences to that of George IV. in 1828.

the 12th century the Guild Merchant of Preston originated in the Royal Charter of Henry II., whereby the burgesses were entitled, in addition to the usual franchises, 'to safe transit throughout the Kingdom, exemption from toll pontage, and stallage, and liberty to buy and sell peaceably; also power to hold a Guild, for the renewal of freedom to the burgesses, the confirming of byelaws, and other purposes.' When the first Guild Merchant was held at Preston is not definitely meetings, or celebrations, were formerly held irregularly, but since 1542, they have taken place at stated intervals of twenty years, the last in 1902. As the patron saint of the Guild is on the first Monday after the anniversary of the Pageants have nowadays become as plentiful as decollation or beheading of St. John. In old days they are of mushroom growth. Away back in have been limited to the duration of a week. From that 'in addition to the transaction of burgess business, the renewal of freedom, &c., merrymaking, feasting, processional displays, and popular entertainments have long been conspicuous items in the programme of Preston Guild.' At the celebration of 1397—the second reliably-dated festival—the Guild hospitality was unbounded. Eight fat oxen, half-a-dozen bullocks, upwards of a score of 'sheep ovis,' sixty loads of 'brewed wort' (new, sweet beer), and two loads of 'brown havre' (brown oat-bread) were freely served to all comers by the Mayor and others, the bulk of this substantial old English cheer having been prepared in the Moot or Town Hall.

As to the Guild Merchant processions. 1762 one particular attraction was the marching of 300 brilliantly-attired ladies. In 1802 there were two very notable processions. In the first the principal noblemen, gentlemen, merchants, and manufacturers of Preston and the neighbouring counties. The manufacturers were headed by John Horrocks, of 'long-cloth' fame and the first great extender of the cotton trade of Preston, and John Watson, who, with one Collinson, built and worked the first cotton mill in the town. Twenty-four 'young, blooming, handsome' female cotton operatives, attired in dresses of locally manufactured material, preceded body. of the dresses were said to be worth upwards character and social influence, in addition to being

Mr. A. Hewitson's 'History of Preston' we learn of £10,000! The trade fraternities added to the picturesqueness of the processions by their elaborately emblazoned banners, the mottoes woven therein being as ingenious as they were appropriate. Four of them are subjoined, with the dates of the incorporation of their respective trades:

> A.D. Woollen weavers Weave truth with trust. 1135 Carpenters and Joiners By hammer and hand. 1477 Clockmakers - -Time the ruler of all things. 1632 Give us light, O Lord. 1637

> The thorny question of precedence in the trades procession is now settled by ballot. This method avoids the difficulty created in 1822, when the gardeners claimed priority over the tailors by reason of the antiquity of their calling—Eden before garments. Whereupon the Tailors' Fraternity of Journeymen, in upholding 'the dignity of their sacredly instituted profession,' declined to attend unless they were allowed 'to take that situation which the high antiquity of their trade demandsa trade first taught by instinct, and matured in the earliest age'! In its philosophy this protest is worthy of the author of 'Sartor Resartus.'

The reference to music is literally as follows: Breakfasts 'Performers at the public Concertos, Miss Brent, Signior Tenducci, Dr. Arne, Mr. Arne Junr., Mr. Desaubrys, Signiors Dasti, Blanck, Richter, Mr. Richardson, Master Bromley (on the harp), Mr. Lambourne (on the musical glasses), &c.' From the same source we learn that 'Large quantities of ale and beer, and cold provisions of all sorts, were ordered to be distributed among the populace each day.'

In 1782 oratorios, in addition to 'plays, masquerades, assemblies, and races,' constituted the chief sources of entertainment. 'Messiah, by Mr. Handel,' was performed at the Parish Church in 1802, doubtless in connection with the Guild celebration of that Forty years later the 'Messiah' was also performed in the parish church 'by a numerous and capital band,' the Musical World records, adding that 'the chorus, under the direction of Mr. Holden, of Liverpool, was very effective in its way'! At the last celebration four important concerts were given, as recorded by 'Our special correspondent' in THE MUSICAL Times of October, 1902.

To visit the Preston and County of Lancaster Queen Victoria Royal Infirmary in the company of Dr. Brown is a most interesting experience. In this beautifully-kept and well-arranged home for the sick and suffering poor, with its bright wards and efficient medical and nursing staff, our cicerone, as the senior consulting physician, carries his musical theories into practice. He has presented a two-manual organ to the chapel, also a pianoforte with pianola attachment, which stands in one of the corridors, so that the patients are able to hear the strains thus mechanically produced. In a paper entitled 'Music and Medicine,' which he read before the Fylde Medical Society, Dr. Brown said that 'music is a very valuable health-maintaining and health-restoring agent, and that the benefits which it confers are especially valuable now that the nervous element is recognised as having such an important share in the production of illness.' As attractive internally as it is beautiful externally, this noble building combines in miniature a National Gallery, a Natural History Museum, and a British Museum, the lower portion of the premises being devoted to a reading-room and the lending library. Of supreme interest and importance is the rich collection of pictures, especially the Newsham bequest, valued at £40,000, consisting of fine specimens of the modern British School, including a Turner and eighteen works by David Cox! Sculpture is also greatly in evidence, one of the treasures in this department being Mr. G. F. Watts's marble bust 'Clytie,' which stands on a splendid block of beautiful onyx-The librarian, Mr. W. S. Bramwell, and Mr. W. B. Barton, the curator of the museum and art galleries, are to be warmly congratulated on the treasures committed to their charge.

The Town Hall is a noble Gothic building designed by Sir G. Gilbert Scott (see the illustration on p. 501), and opened in 1867. The Public Hall, formerly known as the Corn Exchange, contains an organ upon which recitals are frequently given by Mr. James Tomlinson, the Corporation organist, appointed to that office in 1882, and whose portrait is given opposite. following is the specification of this four-manual instrument, built by Messrs. Wilkinson & Son, of Kendal, in 1882, at a cost of £3,000, and presented to the Corporation of Preston by Mr. John Dewhurst:

opened a splendid new Secondary School for Girls, a building charmingly situated amidst the sylvan amenities of Moor Park. This important and wellequipped addition to the educational advantages of the town is under the auspices of the Corporation: already upwards of 200 pupils have been enrolled, and, under so efficient a head-mistress as Miss Stoneman, M.A., The Park School bids fair to become a great success.

It is not easy to obtain detailed information concerning the past history of music at Preston. Dr. Brown has recently unearthed some curious documents relating to the Preston Catch and Glee Club, an almost unknown organization which appears to have had a vigorous existence during the first half of the last century. Its members met week by week at the Bull Hotel or Tavern for amount of £7 195. 6d. Club were somewhat curious:

111. That the proposer of a new Member be accountable for the amount of his first year's subscription.

IV. That each member pay two shillings and sixpence to the Treasurer on his admission, for the purpose of providing a Glee, upon which his name shall be endorsed, and shall, (together with the other Music,) be considered the joint property of the Club for the time being, which Club cannot be dissolved so long as any subscribing Members are in existence.

v. That any Member being desirous of taking any Music out of the Library, shall enter the same in a book appropriated for that purpose; making himself accountable for the value thereof; and any Member taking Music out of the Library aforesaid, and not returning the same on or before the next Meeting, shall forfeit for each Piece or Book, two shillings and sixpence, or be excluded.

VI. That for the purpose of providing Refreshment, &c., the Annual Subscription of each Member shall be the sum of Twelve shillings and sixpence, to be paid in advance.

Some of the receipted accounts which Dr. Brown has rescued from destruction are very amusing. For instance, Mr. Whittle was paid five shillings for 'Removin a Peanana to the Theatre and back,' and the price of gas was 11s. 8d. per 1,000 feet. The refreshment bills show considerable differences between the quantity of liquor consumed and the eatable side of the account. Here are some items: October 4, 1843: Ale, &c., £1 115.; Suppers, 4s.; on November 22 following, Ale, &c., cost £1, and '4 Welsh rabbits 15. 4d.'
On another occasion 'Whiskey Punch' is invoiced at 12s.; a bottle of port wine, 5s.;

In regard to the more singing and refreshments. Rules III. to vi. of the important matter of musical fare enjoyed at these local music-makings, we learn on good authority that it consisted of Elizabethan madrigals (Morley and others), and the works of glee-writers, 'with plenty of Bishop.'

The Preston Choral Society has existed, with certain vicissitudes, for at least sixty-eight years. According to the Musical World of December 31, 1840, at a public rehearsal the grand chorus 'March into the Mount of Olives' [!] was given in a most splendid style and was very loudly applauded' Mr. Thomas Dilworth, a former secretary of the Society who joined 'in the fifties,' remembers hearing of a forerunner Society in Preston, though of a somewhat primitive 'Their efforts,' he says, 'were mainly confined to Handel. They held their practices in a school-room in Walker Street. There they left a heritage of wind instruments, which included a serpent, bassoon, French horns, an old yellow clarinet, and a four-keyed flute, together with a pair of drums which when beaten sounded like barn doors.' Mr. Dilworth recalls a performance of 'Elijah,' given on more modern and ambitious lines after the Society had been reconstituted. When some of the committee reproached Fawcett, the conductor, for his extravagance in the matter of principals and band, that gentleman retorted: 'O — the expense, it was a good concert'!

The Society is mentioned in 'THE MUSICAL TIMES' of December, 1852, in the following terms:

PRESTON.—The Preston Choral Society gave their first public rehearsal in the month of October. The programme comprised selections from Handel's oratorios, 'Judas Maccabæus' and the 'Messiah,' the overture to 'Samson,' and Beethoven's difficult Hallelujah Chorus. Mr. Fawcett assumed the baton of the conductor, the duties of which office he discharged with considerable grace, and often evinced in a marked manner the control he had over the mass of performers under his command, a state of discipline alike creditable to him and to them. Mr. Crompton ably filled the place at the leader's stand; and Mr. S. Bamber presided at the harmonium.

A little later, the issue of this journal for February, 1853, records further progress in these words:

THE PRESTON CHORAL SOCIETY gave its second public performance on Tuesday last, when the first and second parts of Haydn's 'Creation' were well executed to a large and delighted audience, at the Theatre Royal, in Preston, which was filled on the occasion. It is stated to hold 2,000 persons.

In addition to Mr. Fawcett, the names of former conductors include those of Parry, Riley, and C. J. Yates; in more recent years the baton has been in the hands of Signor Risegari, the late Dr. Hiles, Dr. Henry Coward, and Mr. J. E. Adkins; Dr. Bairstow is the present conductor.

Mr. W. W. Galloway, J.P., the President of the is Society, is an Associate of the Royal College of Organists and he was a pupil of Sir Frederick pies, 8s.; sausages, 6s.; and so on, the ale Bridge when the Westminster Abbey organist was at bill for November, 1842, reaching the substantial Manchester Cathedral. At the early age of fifteen Mr. Galloway undertook the duties of honorary capacity at Christ Church, Fulwood, and St. of the Parish Church of Progeorge's Church, Preston. The President has by Tom C. Smith (1892): been a true friend to the Preston Choral Society. He has assisted it by his valuable advice and kind encouragement, and but for his very liberal financial aid, the Society on more than one occasion would have completely collapsed. Society proposes to perform Elgar's 'The Kingdom' at one of its concerts next season, thus furnishing proof of the resources and enterprise of the musical folk of Preston.

In February, 1905, doubtless stimulated thereto by the extraordinarily successful examples of Morecambe and Blackpool, Preston held its first Musical Competition Festival, under the presidency of Dr. Brown. So much success attended this initial effort that a Competition Festival has since been held annually. As at Morecambe and Blackpool, the children's day has been one of the most attractive and interesting features of this music-making. It was pleasant to hear from the lips of Mr. James Taylor, of the Lancashire Daily Post, striking testimony to the value of the competition movement as a means of promoting higher education in music. Speaking from an experience of thirty years in the town and district of Preston, Mr. Taylor says the standard of attainment has been so greatly raised that the pieces now sung could not have been attempted formerly. Sight-reading has been much improved, and so has singing in the various churches—'in fact,' he adds, 'these competitions react all round.' Moreover, there has been an immense elevation in the standard of taste, not only as regards performers, but also on the part of listeners. The good music heard by the public at these festivals has been a revelation to many of those who have attended the contests and concerts, with the result that, to quote Mr. Taylor's words, 'they will not stand the royalty song or common ballads, as they prefer to listen to Mozart and other great composers.' One outcome of these competitions has been the formation of two new choral organizations in the town-the Preston Lyric Society (conductor, Mr. Joseph Smith), and the Preston Vocal Union (conductor, Mr. Herbert Whittaker).

The Parish Church of Preston is hoary with antiquity, the earliest building having been erected in the first century after the establishment of the Christian religion in this country. Originally dedicated to St. Wilfrid, Archbishop of York, the sacred edifice was, at the Reformation, re-dedicated The present fabric is wholly modern. Neither architecturally nor acoustically is the church improved by its heavy galleries (see the illustration All the windows are of beautifully on p. 504).

written in 1574 by the Rev. Nicholas Daniel, vicar of Preston, and addressed to the Bishop of Chester. In this letter the former reverend gentleman sets forth in minute detail his parochial troubles. He says, inter alia, 'And we have here a Popish boy or parish clerke not knowne in ye church but only at organe upon the Sonday and such a novse they made yt no man understood a word they singe, no Geneva psalme they will have before the sermon,' stained glass, the east window, presented by and so on. above extracts throw an interesting light upon the state of parochial church music in England during the latter part of the 16th century.

The present organ, which dates from 1802, was built by James Davis, of London, and presented to the church by John Horrocks, M.P. for the borough. This instrument, which had no pedals, was placed in the West Gallery, where, after having been added to at various times, it remained until 1889. In that year the organ was entirely rebuilt by Messrs. Hill & Son and placed in the north aisle of the chancel. It now consists of three manuals and a pedal, 17 stops on the Great organ, 14 on the Swell, 9 on the Choir, and 8 on the Pedal, making a total of 48 sounding stops, in addition to 7 couplers.

Mr. James Edward Adkins, Mus.B., F.R.C.O., the present organist of the church, was born at Belfast, on December 14, 1867. He began his musical career at the age of nine as a chorister of Ely Cathedral, where he remained until 1882. After having been an articled pupil of the late Dr. E. T. Chipp, organist of the cathedral, he entered the his only visit to England. He came here in 1745, Royal College of Music, where he studied under Sir Walter Parratt and Sir Frederick Bridge, and played the viola in the College orchestra. In 1887 he qualified for the Fellowship diploma of the Royal College of Organists, and took the degree of Bachelor of Music at the University of Durham in His organ appointments have been St. Anne's, Wandsworth, 1884; All Saints', Grosvenor Road, Twickenham, 1886; Esher Parish Church, 1887; and Preston Parish Church, 1890, in succession to Mr. J. J. Greaves, who had held the post for nearly sixty years!

Mr. Adkins-who, by-the-way, is an ardent Freemason—has published a Full Communion Service in B flat, and an Evening Service in D; to the 'Organists' Quarterly Journal' he contributed a Tennyson's 'Tears, idle tears,' which is being world, with Gluck as its shining light. compositions include two Concert overtures for full and music. orchestra; a Sonata for the organ; settings of 'Rock of Ages' and the 'Pentecost'; two settings of the Cantate Domino and Deus misereatur written for the choir of Albany Cathedral, U.S.A.; and an Evening Service for men's voices. Oratorios are occasionally sung in the church; the works that have been given include Haydn's 'Passion,' Schubert's 'Song of Miriam,' Spohr's 'Last Judgment' and 'Calvary,' Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' (Part I.) and 'Christus,' and Gounod's 'Redemption.' In December next it is proposed to give Parts I., II., and III. of Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio.' From this it will be seen that the music at Preston Parish Church is well cared for under the direction of its enthusiastic organist and choirmaster.

GLUCK IN ENGLAND.

CHRISTOPH WILLIBALD RITTER VON GLUCK. BORN, JULY 2, 1714: DIED, NOVEMBER 15, 1787.

Gluck was thirty-one years of age when he paid a memorable year in the history of our country. A spirit of unrest prevailed owing to the invading proclivities of 'Bonnie Prince Charlie.' When, in December, the Pretender had reached Derby with his six thousand men, London was stricken with panic. So great was the run upon the Bank of England that cheques were paid in sixpences in order to gain time, and so prevent the Old Lady Pimlico, 1885; St. Stephen's, East of Threadneedle Street from 'breaking' or 'stopping payment.' And the King sent his jewels to a vessel in the Thames. No wonder that matters operatic were at a standstill during the anxious period of 'The Forty-five.' Burney tells us that the great Opera House in London was 'shut up this year on account of the Rebellion, and popular prejudice against the performers, who, being foreigners, were chiefly Roman Catholics.' Dirge, and he has recently composed a setting of Soon, however, a new era dawned in the operatic specially printed for next year's Musical Competition Festival at Preston. His unpublished of the nation, especially the sister arts of painting William Hogarth, aged forty-eight, was at the zenith of his fame. Joshua Reynolds, then a young man of twenty-two years, had already begun to add lustre to his name. In the realm of music the Madrigal Society—which met at the 'Founders' Arms,' Lothbury—had entered upon for many years acting secretary of the Northern the fourth year of its long and still vigorous life. Concerts were given at Hickford's Rooms, at the he originated, in 1893, the meetings held in west end of the town, and at the 'Swan' and extended to other large cities and towns in the music in the metropolis was represented by provinces. If the information concerning Gluck's visit to England is somewhat meagre, it is reliable. The chief sources are two—Dr. Burney and the advertisements in the London journals of the day. Burney, at that time just passing out of his teens, was full of the enthusiasm which is at summer He twice tells heat in a youthful lover of music. us in his 'History of Music' (vol. iv., pp. 452 and 662) that his information is derived from personal knowledge and observation. 'As I first arrived in London in the year 1744,' he says (p. 662), 'I am enabled to give the reader an exact account of the general state of Music there at that time and since from my own memory and knowledge, without consulting books, or trusting to tradition.' Could anything be more satisfactory?

The reputation which Gluck had made as a composer of Italian operas, at Milan (beginning with 'Artaserse,' produced December 26, 1741), Venice and Turin, doubtless prompted an invitation to England for the re-opening of the Opera House in 1746. No definite information is available as to who sent the invitation or the exact date when the composer first set foot on our shores. name of Lord Middlesex has been associated with the coming of Gluck, and the date of the composer's arrival here is given as 'towards the end of 1745.' Certain it is that on January 7, 1746, the music of Gluck obtained its first hearing in this country. The advertisement columns of the General Advertiser of that date furnish the desired information:

Burney records that the opera was 'performed before the Duke of Cumberland [Butcher Cumberland'], in compliment to whom the whole was written and composed.' He goes on to tell us that 'the [male] singers were Monticelli, Jozzi, and Ciacchi; with Signora Pompeati, afterwards better known by the name of Madame Cornelie, The first woman, Imer, never and Frasi. surpassed mediocrity in voice, taste, or action: and the Pompeati, though nominally second woman, had such a masculine and violent manner of singing, that few female symptoms were perceptible. The new dances by Auretti, and the charming Violetta, afterwards Mrs. Garrick, were much more applauded than the songs, which, however, for the time had considerable merit.'

The 'nominally second' but masculine woman Pompeati became the notorious Mrs. Cornelys, styled the 'Circe of Soho Square,' by reason of the 'Society' entertainments, concerts and masked balls she gave at Carlisle House in that well-known thoroughfare. Giulia Frasi, then a young singer, afterwards achieved fame as a singer in Handel's oratorios. She was a pupil of Burney, doubtless for theory. When she told Handel that 'she should study hard and was going to learn thorough-base in order to accompany herself,' records Burney, 'Handel, who well knew how little this pleasing singer was addicted to application and diligence, said "Oh—vaat may we not expect!" The 'charming Violetta' (Eva Maria Violette, to give the correct spelling of her name), whose dancing won more applause than Gluck's music, married David Garrick in 1749. She survived him upwards of forty years and at her death—in 1822, at the great age of ninety-seven—she was buried in her distinguished husband's grave in Westminster Abbey. In her old age the once beautiful dancer was described as a little bowed-down old woman, who went about leaning on a gold-headed cane, dressed in deep mourning, and always talking of her 'dear Davy.'

With regard to the music of 'La Caduta de' Giganti,' Burney says: 'The first air in G minor is of an original cast, but monotonous. The second air has genius and design in it. Then a duet, in which he [Gluck] hazarded many new passages and effects. The following air, for Monticelli, is very original in symphony and accompaniments, which a little disturbed the voice-part in performance, I well remember, and Monticelli called it aria tedesca. His contemporaries in Italy, at this time, seemed too much filed down; and he wanted the file, which when used afterwards in that country, made him one of the greatest composers of his time. The next air printed is in a very peculiar measure and like no other that I remember: it has great merit of novelty and accompaniment; the voice-part wants only a little more grace and quiet. The following song, set for Jozzi, a good musician, with little voice, is full of new and ingenious passages and effects; I should like to hear this air well performed at the opera; it is kept alive from beginning to end.'

Burney prophetically adds: 'Something might be expected from a young man able to produce this opera, imperfect as it was.' His statement, repeatedly copied by other biographers, that it had only five representations, does not agree with the advertisements in the General Advertiser, which give announcements of six performances, January 7, 11, 14, 18, 21 and 25, 1746. Although 'La Caduta de' Giganti' proved to be a failure, it brought about the interesting fact that the earliest publication of any of Gluck's music took place in England! Walsh published the following six excerpts from the opera:

Care pupille amate - Signor Jozzi.

Vezzi lusinghe e sguardi - Signora Pompeati.

Ah m'ingannasti (duet) - Signora Pompeati.

Si, ben mio, sarò se il vuoi - Signor Monticelli.

E' uguale ad un tormento - Signor Jozzi.

'Artamene,' the second opera of Gluck's performed in London, was given for the first time on March 4. It has been repeatedly stated that this was a re-written version of an 'Artamene' produced at Crema in 1743. The recent and exhaustive researches of Signor Francesco Piovano, of Rome, * go to prove that no 'Artamene' composed by Gluck was produced at Crema in 1743, but that an unknown opera by him, entitled 'Il Tigrane,' had its first representation there in September of that year. There is reason to believe that, in the 'Artamene' produced in biographical inaccuracy. In justice to M. Alfred London in 1746, Gluck used material taken Concerning his earlier operas. performance here, Burney must again quoted. 'Monticelli was every night encored as to any such work having been written by Gluck. in "Rasserena il mesto ciglio." The motivo As a matter of fact the 'Piramo e Tisbe,' with of this air is grateful to every ear; but it is too often repeated, being introduced seven times, which, there being a Da capo, is multiplied to fourteen. The second part is good for nothing. Indeed, no other air in this opera that has been printed furnished a single portent of the great genius this composer afterwards manifested.' He adds that the opera ran ten nights, but the advertisements announce eleven performances. The principal songs in this, as in the earlier opera, were published by Walsh under the following title, taken from the copy in the British Museum Library:

The | Favourite Songs | in the | Opera | call'd | Artamene | By Sigr. Gluck.

London. Printed for I. Walsh in Catherine Street in ye Strand.

The titles of the songs and the names of those who sang them are:

Rasserena il mesto ciglio -Signor Monticelli. Pensa a serbami oh cara È maggiore d'ogn'albro Signora Frasi. Il suo leggiadro viso Signor Jozzi. - Signora Pompeati Se Crudeli tanto (afterwards Mrs. Cornelys). Già presso al termine Signora Jozzi.

Here is the opening phrase of the first song, which had an extraordinary measure of popularity. Its Handelian character will not escape notice:

"Un opera inconnu de Gluck, par Francesco Piovano (Rome). Sammelbände der Internationalen Musik-Gesellschaft. Jan.-March,

The song was evidently a favourite with Gluck, for, at the age of fifty-eight, he sang it to Dr. Burney when the historian visited him at Vienna in the autumn of 1772.

Thus ends the chapter of Gluck's operas given during his only visit to England. reader will probably ask, 'what about the pasticcio "Piramo e Tisbe," ascribed to him by all his biographers?' Ah! gentle reader, well may you put that interrogation, for thereby hangs a tale which has a very peculiar twist of extraordinary Wotquenne (compiler of the invaluable Thematic its catalogue of Gluck's works) and Signor Piovano, be it should be stated that they both had grave doubts which Gluck has been discredited, is the 'Pyramus and Thisbe' composed by John Frederick Lampe! This mock opera was produced at Covent Garden Theatre on January 25, 1745, and repeated several times during that year, including the month of December. As Gluck had arrived here by the end of the year, he probably heard Lampe's concoction, and profited by its patchwork futility; but to say, as most of the biographers do, that the failure of Gluck's 'Piramo e Tisbe' caused him to alter his style, is to repeat one of those mysterious myths in musical history which provoke something more than a smile.

The following is the published title of Lampe's composition:

Pyramus and Thisbe: | A | Mock-opera. | The Words taken from Shakespeare. | as it is Perform'd at the | Theatre - Royal | in | Covent - Garden. | Set to Musick by | Mr. I. F. Lampe. London. Printed for I. Walsh, in Catherine Street, in the Strand.

Before making mention of Gluck's concert experiences during his sojourn in London, let us see what Arne and Handel were doing in the musical way. At Drury Lane Theatre, on the last day of January (1746), 'His Majesty's Company of Comedians presented a Play call'd The Tempest, as written by Shakespeare . . . with the original decorations, particularly the Grand Masque, new set to Musick by Mr. Arne. The Part of Ariel (with the proper Songs) by Mrs. Clive.' Suffice it to say that one of those 'proper Songs'—'Where the bee sucks'—made the composer of 'Rule, Britannia' a not unworthy rival of the composer of 'Che farò.' A little later—April 12, and at the same theatre-Arne had his benefit, at which was 'presented a Tragedy call'd "The Orphan, or the unhappy marriage." The part of Monimia to be performed by Mrs. Cibber. With singing by Mrs. Arne, and other Entertainments, as will be express'd in the Great Bills. Tickets to be obtained of Mr. Arne, next door to the Crown and Cushion in Great Queen Street by Lincoln's Inn Fields.'

GUSTAVUS WALTZ, HANDEL'S COOK.

And then in regard to Handel. On February 14, 1746, at Covent Garden Theatre, he produced 'A new Occasional Oratorio, with a new concerto on the organ.' Later in the year he was at work on his 'Judas Maccabæus,' the overture of which is headed 'angenfangen den 9 July 8 1746 oder den 8 ·) dieses.' Handel had not a very high opinion of Gluck as a composer at this time. Burney says: 'I remember when Mrs. Cibber, in my hearing, asked Handel what sort of a composer he was; his answer, prefaced by an oath, was "he knows no more of contrapunto as mein cook, Waltz."' In order to modify this outspoken opinion, it should be stated that, in addition to ministering to the culinary wants of Handel, Mr. Gustavus Waltz (whose portrait is given above) was a violoncellist and a vocalist. Doubtless his dishes were in better taste than his master's expletive criticisms.

Burney tells us that Handel was 'seldom absent from the Benefit of decayed musicians and their families.' Therefore it may be assumed that the master attended the concert given on March 25. Moreover, if Gluck, as is most probable, was also present to conduct his own compositions, and Handel himself played his own new concerto, these two master musicians met on that philanthropic occasion. The advertisement, which also contained the entire programme, reads thus in the General Advertiser:

HAYMARKET:

To begin at six o'Clock.

, The Tickets deliver'd to the Subscribers to this Charity will admit one Person to any Part of the House.

The next concert within our survey was of quite a different nature. It speaks for itself in the following advertisement from the General Advertiser of March 31, 1746:

At Mr. Hickford's Great Room in Brewer's Street, on Monday, April 14, Signor GLUCK, Composer of the Operas, will exhibit a Concert of Musick. By the best Performers from the Opera-House.

Particularly, He will play a Concerto upon Twenty-six Drinking-Glasses, tuned with Spring-Water, accompanied with the whole Band, being a new Instrument of his own Invention; upon which he performs whatever may be done on a Violin or Harpsichord; and thereby hope to satisfy the Curious, as well as the Lovers of Musick.

> To begin at Half an Hour after Six. Tickets Half a Guinea each.

Tickets to be had at the Orange Coffee-house in the Haymarket; at Mr. Walsh's in Katherine-street in the Strand; and at the Place of Performance.

As the advertisement was not repeated, it may be inferred that this particular concert did not come off, owing perhaps to a scarcity of 'spring water,' as a subsequent advertisement omitted any reference to the particular quality of the tuneful beverage employed It reads thus:

At the Desire of several Persons of Quality.

At the little Theatre in the Haymarket, on Wednesday next [April 23], will be perform'd a Concert of Vocal and Instrumental MUSICK.

By the principal Performers of the Opera, particularly Signor Gluck, Composer of the Opera, will play a Concerto, and a Song to be sung by Signora FRASI, upon a new Instrument of 26 Glasses, and therefore hopes to satisfy the Curious, as well as all Lovers of Musick.

Pit and Boxes to be put together at Half a Guinea each, Gallery 5s.

To begin at Half an Hour after Six.

Tickets to be had at the Prince of Orange Coffee-house in the Haymarket.

The musical critic had no existence at that time. One wonders what those of the present day would have to say about Signor Gluck's performances on those vessels of imbibition. In the absence of any such criticism, Horace Walpole may be quoted. Writing to Horace Mann, on March 28, 1746, he says: 'The Operas flourish more than in any latter years; the composer is Gluck, a German: he is to have a benefit, at which he is to play on a set of drinking-glasses, which he modulates with water: I think I have heard you speak of some such thing.' It seems extraordinary that at his benefit Gluck, the composer, should play a concerto 'upon a new instrument of 26 glasses.'

As an instrumental composer Gluck is hardly known to fame, but the British Museum contains the following publication, issued during his visit to England:

Six | Sonatas | for two | Violins & a Thorough Bass | compos'd by | SIGR. GLUCK. | Composer to the Opera.

London Printed or J. Simpson at the Bass Viol and | Flute at Sweeting's Alley opposite the East Door of ye Royal Exchange.

No better conclusion to these informal notes on Gluck's only visit to England could be found than Burney's description of the visit he paid to the composer at Vienna in September 2, 1722, as recorded in 'The present state of music in Germany, &c. ' (1775): 'At five o'clock Lord Stormont's coach carried Madame Thun, his lordship, and myself, to the house of the Chevalier Gluck, in the Fauxbourg St. Mark. He is very well housed there; has a pretty garden, and a great number of neat, and elegantly furnished rooms. He has no children. Madame Gluck and his niece who lives with him. came to receive us at the door as well as the veteran composer himself. He is much pitted with the small-pox and very coarse in figure and look, but was soon got into good humour; and he talked, sung, and played, Madame Thun observed, more than ever she knew him at any one time. He began, upon a very bad harpsichord, by accompanying his niece, who is but thirteen years old, in two of the capital scenes of his own famous opera of "Alceste." She has a powerful and welltoned voice, and sung with infinite taste, feeling, expression, and even execution.

'When she had done, her uncle was prevailed upon to sing himself; and with as little voice as possible, he contrived to entertain and even delight the company, in a very high degree; for, with the richness of accompaniment, the energy and vehemence of his manner in the Allegros, and his judicious expression in the slow movements, he so well compensated for the want of voice that it was a defect which was soon entirely forgotten.

'He was so good-humoured as to perform almost his whole opera of "Alceste"; many admirable things in a still later opera of his, called "Paride ed Elena"; and in a French opera, from Racine's "Iphigénie," which he has just composed. This last, though he had not as yet committed a note of it to paper, was so well digested in his head, and his retention is so wonderful, that he sung it nearly from the beginning to the end, with as much readiness as if he had had a fair score before him.

'His invention is, I believe, unequalled by any other composer who now lives, or has ever existed, particularly in dramatic painting and theatrical effects. He studies a poem a long time before he thinks of setting it. He considers well the relation which each part bears to the whole, the general cast of each character, and aspires more at satisfying the mind, than flattering the ear. is not only being a friend to poetry, but a poet himself; and if he had language sufficient, of any other kind than that of sound, in which to express his ideas, I am certain he would be a great poet: as it is, music, in his hands, is a most copious, nervous, elegant, and expressive language.'

'I reminded M. Gluck of his air "Rasserena il mesto ciglio," which was in such great favour in England, so long ago as the year 1745; and prevailed upon him, not only to sing that, but several others of his first and most favourite airs. He told me that he owed entirely to England the study of nature in his dramatic compositions: he went thither at a very disadvantageous period. Handel was then so high in fame, that no one would willingly listen to any other than to his The rebellion broke out; all foreigners were regarded as dangerous to the state: the Opera-house was shut up, by order of the Lord Chamberlain, and it was with great difficulty and address that Lord Middlesex obtained permission to open it again, with a temporary and political performance, "La Caduta de' Giganti." This Gluck worked upon with fear and trembling, not only on account of the few friends he had in England, but from an apprehension of riot and popular fury, at the opening of a theatre in which none but foreigners and papists were employed.

'He then studied the English taste; remarked particularly what the audience seemed most to feel; and finding that plainness and simplicity had the greatest effect upon them, he has, ever since that time, endeavoured to write for the voice, more in the natural tones of the human affections and passions, than to flatter the lovers of deep science or difficult execution.

The present writer had intended to conclude this article with a list of the first performances of Gluck's operas in England, but as the available information on this point is somewhat conflicting, the project was relinquished with regret.

For many years I wanted to compose a work entitled 'Love, a theme with variations.' But I gave it up. When I was young I had the theme, but not sufficient experience for the variations. When I was old I could write the variations, but could not find the theme.

The monument to John Sebastian Bach recently erected at Leipzig, stands in front of St. Thomas's Church, a most appropriate position for a memento of one so illustriously connected with that historic sanctuary. At the unveiling ceremony, on May 17, English musicians were represented by that ardent Bach-lover, Mr. Henry Davey. This information supersedes and corrects that given in our July issue,

The arrangements for the visit to Canada of the Sheffield Musical Union (conductor, Dr. Henry Coward) have now been matured. The party will leave Glasgow on October 23 and reach Montreal on November 1. The itinerary will include Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, Niagara, Hamilton, London (the farthest point), Brantford, Galt or Guelph, Belleville or Kingston, Montreal and, perhaps, Quebec.

The approaching centenary of the birth of Mendelssohn—he was born at Hamburg, February 3, 1809—has caused the directors of the Crystal Palace to celebrate the event by enlarging the scope of the Handel Festival, due next year. It is proposed to hold a Handel-Mendelssohn Festival in June, 1909, which will include performances of 'Messiah' and 'Elijah,' each oratorio occupying one day. On the Selection day, excerpts will be given from Handel's 'Israel in Egypt' and Mendelssohn's choral and orchestral works. Dr. F. H. Cowen will conduct this novel two-composer music-making at Sydenham.

A musical coincidence of quite exceptional interest was recently pointed out by Herr Arthur Smolian, a critic and Musikschriftsteller of excellent repute in To be sure, the subject of musical Germany. coincidence has been worn threadbare, but Herr Smolian's interesting find is altogether out of the usual run of such things. He had been asked to write an analysis of Liszt's 'Dante' Symphony for a concert in Leipzig, and in the course of his elucidatory remarks he drew attention to the relationship existing between (1) the short F sharp. Episode in seven-four time suggesting the touching dialogue between Paolo and Francesca in Liszt's work, (2) a passage in Beethoven's great 'Hammerklavier' Sonata in B flat (Op. 106), and (3) the theme with the characteristic 'turn' upon which great portions of the Love Duet, and of the Liebestod-Finale in Wagner's 'Tristan und Isolde' are built. The similarity lies not so much in the actual notes which these three great masters have put upon paper, but in the mood, which is that of intensest, purest love-longing, and finds expression chiefly in the yearning upward glance across the interval of a seventh which is found in each of the passages.

The most fascinating part of Herr Smolian's discovery is, however, the fact that Beethoven is here, in one of his most inspired and world-forgetting moments, found in the company of the masters who have undoubtedly exercised the most potent influence upon music since his great soul left its frail dwelling-place. For the expression is of the same depth, the exultation of the same height, in the three masters, however great the difference in the means employed in their presentation. Here are the three bars from Beethoven's sonata. They are to be found near the end of the section in F sharp in the Adagio sostenuto:

Dr. T. von Frimmel, the well-known authority on Beethoven, in the Neue Freie Presse (Vienna) calls special attention to and quotes largely from the biographical sketch of George P. Bridgetower which appeared in our May issue. Several English newspapers have also called attention to this article on the mulatto violinist for whom Beethoven wrote the Kreutzer sonata.

The theme occurs in a different version earlier in the movement. Liszt's beautiful love-theme is played by muted violins, accompanied by harps, violas, &c., and, like Beethoven's soaring thought, is set in the key of F sharp:

The example from Wagner is so well known that quotation is almost unnecessary. However, for the sake of easier comparison, it shall be set out in the key of the above, as it appears at the words 'Süsser Athem sanft entwent':

Beautiful and affecting as the idea is in Beethoven and Liszt, it is Wagner, who, in his great love-drama, has made it his very own by recognizing its latent possibilities and founding upon it one of those wonderful pieces of music that have the power of moving humanity as little else can. 'Isolden's Liebestod' will remain a unique monument to Wagner's genius, as it is a unique outpouring of the human heart in moments of loftiest exultation. It is a moving thought that the inspired piece may owe something to the master, Beethoven, whom Wagner admired above all others.

'F. C.' writes: 'In your July number you quote a question asked by the late Sir George Grove: "Why is it that people with imperfect acquirements are often so much more enthusiastic than those who know more?" Surely the answer is obvious: the former are in the position of lovers in the courtship stage—they are wooing the goddess of their Art (or heart), and are therefore enthusiastic. The professional artists are wedded for ever to the object of their admiration: some are disenchanted, others remain faithful lovers still; but the season for rapture is past, and is replaced by a devotion which is no longer blind to the faults of its idol.'

Mr. Arthur Hervey has resigned his appointment of musical critic to the Morning Post, which he has held for more than seventeen years, in order to devote himself entirely to composition. He is succeeded by Mr. Francis E. Barrett, a son of Dr. W. A. Barrett and Mr. Hervey's immediate predecessor, who has ably discharged the duties of assistant critic for some years past.

It is a London, not a poor provincial paper, which is responsible for the following information:

During a torrential downpour at Wiveliscombe, Devonshire, water rushed through the roof of the parish church and flooded the organ, all the pipes being filled.

In the absence of any information to the contrary, it may be assumed that those pipes were all stopped—at the wrong end. And how greatly such a 'torrential downpour' would aid the organist in a realistic interpretation of the 'Storm' fantasia, or in playing 'Thanks be to God'! Was the organ in question mechanically blown? Perchance it was like the instrument in a certain cathedral which, a guide informed a visitor, was 'blown by hydraulic water.'

As a set off to the metropolitan extract above given, here are some curious comments upon an organ recital as recorded in a newspaper issued North of the Tweed. On that occasion the 'War march' from 'Athalie' was 'given with the swell organ coupled, standing out predominant.' What about the pretonic? Again, in reference to the same march: 'Mention should be made of the intermezzo section with the full pedal organ, minus swell, staccato obbligato. . . . Towards the close Mr. -- brought the organ from full to piano gradually, with a crescendo again to full organ, closing the piece as a solemn march.' We are also told that Mr. -- (who appeared in the dual, or 'do all,' capacity of organist and vocalist) 'in the Messiah item gave examples of the master's scale passages on different vowel sounds, finishing on low F sharp, an octave lower than written.' Here is an instance of an organist singing, not playing, low.

Among the Civil List Pensions granted in the present year is one of £80 to Mr. William Ashton Ellis, 'in consideration of his contributions to literature in biography and music.'

Church and Organ Music.

THE MORNING HYMN.

Centenaries serve the useful purpose of calling to remembrance persons who might otherwise be forgotten. This being admitted, there is some justification for the following In memoriam notes on the composer of a familiar church-song, who passed into the Unseen one hundred years ago.

François Hippolite Barthélémon, the eldest of a family of sixteen children, was born at Bordeaux, July 27, 1741. His father was an officer in the Army, and for many years held a responsible position in a Colonial department under the French government; his mother, an Irish lady, came of a wealthy friend, had you composed family in Queen's County. His maternal ancestry have been immortalised.'

doubtless accounted for the fact that he, although a Frenchman, was for some time an officer in the Duke of Berwick's regiment of the Irish Brigade. A perfect gentleman, accomplished in music and fencing, proficient in modern languages and a Hebrew scholar, Barthélémon was held in the highest esteem, particularly by his own Colonel. The Earl of Kellie, an intimate friend of the Colonel's and a passionate lover of music, became attached to the young officer, and induced him to forsake the profession of arms in favour of the art of music. Thereupon Barthélémon studied the violin on the continent and in due time, through the influence of the Earl of Kellie, had the honour of appearing at Court before King George III. and his Consort.

Upon his arrival in England in 1765, Barthélémon was appointed leader of the Opera orchestra. In the following year (1766) two important events occurred in his life. He married Miss Mary (or Maria) Young, a great-granddaughter of Anthony Young, organist of All Hallows' Church, Barking, and a niece of Mrs. Arne, the wife of Dr. Arne; and his opera 'Pelopida' was produced at the King's Theatre. Burney says of this work: 'There were traits of genius and bold modulation in the music, which promised, with experience in writing for the voice and a more perfect acquaintance with the Italian language and stage, future works of great worth and abilities.'
The success of this opera caused Garrick and, through him, Dr. Johnson, to make Barthélémon's acquaintance. Garrick requested him to set to music a song in the play of 'The Country Girl,' which had so much success that other commissions followed, including a burletta entitled 'Orpheus' in Act II. of the operatic farce 'A peep behind the curtain.' Garrick cleared by this successful work several thousand pounds, but rewarded Barthélémon with the sum of forty guineas instead of the fifty he had promised, giving as his reason the great expense of the 'dancing cows' in the production! Barthélémon composed the music to other dramatic pieces for the English stage, now quite forgotten, and an opera, 'Le Fleuve Scamandre,' produced at Paris in 1768.

From 1770 to 1776 he was leader of the orchestra at Vauxhall Gardens, thence he went on a continental tour, he and his wife being well received in the best circles of society. While in Italy, at the request of the Grand Duke of Tuscany he composed his Italian oratorio 'Jeste in Massa,' part of which was composer with two gold medals as a mark of esteem. A selection from this oratorio was posthumously published by the composer's daughter in 1827. On his return to England, Barthélémon seems to have resumed his duties at Vauxhall Gardens. In 1784 he and his wife, who was a singer, appeared with success in various concerts given at Dublin. During the visits of Haydn to London—in 1791 and 1794—a warm friendship sprang up between the two composers, so intimate, indeed, as to ripen into almost brotherly affection. Haydn gave lessons to Cecilia, the only child of the house, and took part in a concert given by Barthélémon on May 30, 1792. When Haydn was shown the score of 'Jefte in Masía,' he complimented the composer by saying, 'Ah, my dear friend, had you composed that in Germany, you would

As a violinist Barthélémon had a great reputation. Burney refers to his 'powerful hand aud truly vocal adagio.' Fanny Burney causes one of the characters in her 'Evelina' to speak 'of hearing a concerto on the violin by Mr. Barthélémon, who, to me, seems a player of exquisite fancy, feeling, and variety'; and when Salomon heard of Barthélémon's death, he said: 'We have lost our Corelli! There is no one now that can play those sublime solos.' The following appreciation of his violin playing is from the pen of Samuel Wesley, who says:

Barthélémon's performance on the violin was both original and highly elegant, and his adagio playing wholly Italian oratorio 'Jeste in Massa,' part of which was unrivalled by any other master, Abel excepted. Among the performed before the Pope, who presented the pieces for the execution of which he was universally celebrated was the ninth solo of Corelli, the first and slow movement of which he gave in a manner which was always sure to excite the universal admiration and rapturous applause of every surrounding hearer.

The closing years of Barthélémon's life seem to have been clouded by disease and unhappiness; indeed, his daughter records that he died paralytic and broken-hearted! The death of Mrs. Arne in 1795, who, for the seventeen years after the death of her husband lived under Barthélémon's roof, and that of his own good wife in 1799, were clouds in the sunshine of our composer's life—clouds which do not appear to have been dispersed by his second marriage.

He died at his house, 23, Hatfield Street, a narrow thoroughfare off Stamford Street, Blackfriars, on July 23, 1808. His death is thus briefly recorded in the Morning Chronicle of Monday, July 25, 1808:

On Saturday, at his house near Blackfriars Road, at an advanced age, Mr. Barthélémon, the celebrated performer on the violin; he particularly excelled as a solo performer, and of Corelli's music.

In a London directory of that year his name appears as 'Bartholomew (sic)—musician, 23, Hatfield Street, Blackfriars.' The place of his burial is at present unknown.

'What claim has Barthélémon to fame?' The written da answer to this question is to be found in every hymnal, as the bir for did he not compose the tune to Bishop Ken's 'Morning Hymn'? The circumstance of his having the tune thus contributed to English worship-music is not facsimile:

without interest. In the latter part of the 18th century the chaplain and secretary of the Asylum for Female Orphans—an institution which stood at the junction of Kennington and Westminster-bridge Roads, and now occupied by Christ Church—was the Rev. Jacob Duché, one of the most eloquent and popular preachers in London. The first Mrs. Barthélémon was in the habit of attending the ministry of this eminent divine, with the result that he asked Barthélémon to compose a setting of Bishop Ken's 'Awake, my soul, and with the sun' for a new edition of the hymnal then in use at the Asylum. Accordingly the now familiar tune first appeared in the collection entitled:

The | Hymns and Psalms | Used at the | Asylum | or House of Refuge for | Female Orphans. | Selected by W. GAWLER, Organist to the Asylum. London, Printed & Sold at A. Bland & Weller's Music Warehouse, No. 23, Oxford Street. Pr. 7s. 6d.

The tune did not appear in the 1785 edition of this book, and no definite date can be given for its publication; but as a copy of the above publication in the possession of Dr. W. H. Cummings bears the written date '1789,' that may be taken approximately as the birth-year of the tune. Organists and others may be interested in making the acquaintance of the tune in its original form. Here it is, in exact facsimile:

It will be observed that the passing notes in the first and third lines (of words) of the tune as now printed find no place in the original. The natural and easy common-chord skips and the stepwise progressions of the melody are characteristic of all the old hymn-tunes which have survived and which, in many cases, as in this, kept green the memory of their composers.

It should be added that the Rev. Jacob Duché, although he remained a clergyman of the Church of England, preached the doctrines of the New Church (Swedenborgian), and that Barthélémon fully embraced and died in that faith. For much of the information contained in the above notes the present writer is indebted to an interesting article on Barthélémon by Mr. Charles Higham which appeared in the 'New Church Magazine' for January, 1896; in the issue of the following September and October is an article, also by Mr. Higham, on the Rev. Jacob Duché.

The portrait of Barthélémon is from a painting of which the head and cravat are by Gainsborough, the work being completed by a French artist.

LICHFIELD CATHEDRAL.

Special thanksgiving services for the re-opening of the enlarged organ and the restoration of St. Stephen's Chapel, were successfully held in Lichfield Cathedral on June 30. At the morning service Brahms's 'How lovely is Thy dwelling-place' furnished the anthem, and after the sermon, preached by the Bishop of Massachusetts, the 'Solemn Te Deum' was Sir Charles Stanford's setting in B flat. At Evensong (3 p.m.) the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were 'Smart in B flat.' The anthem was Sir George Martin's 'Magnify His name and shew forth His praise with the songs of your lips, and with harps,' composed for the annual festival of the London Gregorian Choral Association, held in St. Paul's Cathedral, June 12, In this fine though unpretentious composition, Sir George has introduced the Eighth tone with the happiest results. At both services was sung a new setting of the Rev. Godfrey Thring's hymn, 'Hark! setting of the Rev. Godfrey Thring's hymn, 'Hark! hark, the organ loudly peals,' composed by Mr. John E. West, specially for the occasion. This effective tune, with its organ interludes (ad lib.) between the verses, is one that is likely to become popular for use at organ dedication services, its bold yet simple construction, the harmony and unison treatment of the voice parts, together with its independent organ part, being particularly felicitous.

At the morning service the music was conducted by Sir George Martin, organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, with Mr. John B. Lott, organist of Lichfield Cathedral, at the organ, their respective duties being interchanged at the afternoon service. On both occasions the cathedral choir was augmented to the number of 150 voices, including members of the Lichfield Musical Society, in addition to thirty choristers from Tamworth, who had been trained by Mr. H. Rose, organist of the Parish Church and assistant-organist of Lichfield Cathedral. The rendering of the music throughout the day reflected great credit upon all concerned, especially upon Mr. J. B. Lott, who has held the office of chief-musician of Lichfield with distinction for twenty-seven years.

During the afternoon service Sir George Martin played the following pieces on the reconstructed organ:

Toccata and fugue in D minor - Bach.

Prelude in C sharp minor - Rachmaninoff.

Largo, from the 'New World' symphony - Dvordk.

Elegy - Silas.

Minuet in B flat - Handel.

Next month we hope to give a complete specification of the organ, with some views. In the meantime it should be stated that the instrument has been removed from its former unsatisfactory floor location in St. Stephen's Chapel to its present elevated position.

Mr. Theodore Walrond, M.A., has been appointed acting-organist of Carlisle Cathedral in succession to Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson. He is at present organist of St. Cuthbert's Church in that city, and for over two years has been assistant to the acting-organist at the cathedral. Mr. Nicholson will not, however, enter upon his new duties at Manchester Cathedral until January I. We understand that this post was offered to him by the Dean and Chapter of Manchester without competition, and that he did not apply for it.

RIPON CATHEDRAL.

The North-East Cathedral Choir Association held a festival service here at Evensong on July 23. Four cathedral choirs—Durham, York, Wakefield and Ripon—combined in a most impressive rendering of an interesting selection of music. The Ripon choir sang the 'verse' portions, the boys specially distinguishing themselves, and in so doing gave strong proof of the skilful training they receive from Mr. Moody. Dr. Bairstow's fine setting, in D, of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis was sung, and the anthems were two Psalms by Mendelssohn, 'Not unto us, O Lord' (cxv.) and 'When Israel out of Egypt came' (cxiv.). The Rev. Arnold D. Culley (Durham) played the in-going voluntary and accompanied all the service with the exception of the anthems, which were entrusted to Mr. T. Tertius Noble (York). Mr. J. N. Hardy (Wakefield) played the out-going voluntary, and Mr. C. H. Moody (Ripon) conducted throughout and contributed the chant for Psalm lxxii. and the offertory hymn. The opening hymn, sung in procession, was an effective setting of 'Hail, festal day! for ever sanctified,' composed by the late Dr. Armes. The organ accompaniment was reinforced by drums, played by Mr. Waller, of the Kursaal Orchestra, Harrogate.

NORWICH CATHEDRAL.

Dr. Bunnett had no sooner retired from the organistship of St. Peter Mancroft Church, Norwich—a post he had held for thirty-one years—than the Dean of Norwich invited him to become organist of the Sunday evening services held in the nave of the cathedral. In accepting the Dean's muchappreciated offer, Dr. Bunnett returns to the scene of his former labours, which covered a period of thirty-five years, first as chorister in 1842, and afterwards as assistant-organist until the year 1877. In addressing the Nave choir at his first rehearsal on July 4, Dr. Bunnett said it was a great pleasure to him to come back to what he might term his old love. He felt sure that after their kind reception they would give him their hearty support and work with him. They might be sure he would take a very great interest in their work.

PRESENTATIONS.

Mr. F. J. W. Crowe, organist of Chichester Cathedral, has been presented with an ivory and silver-mounted baton, together with an illuminated address, by the Chichester Oratorio and Orchestral Societies, as a token of their esteem and in acknowledgment of the work he has done during the past six years to forward the cause of music in the city. The presentation was made, on behalf of the subscribers, by the Countess of March, at the Deanery, on July 18. The Dean, who presided, spoke in appreciative terms of the enthusiasm and self-denying labours of Mr. Crowe in initiating and carrying out the oratorio performances that have been held from time to time in the cathedral.

Mr. Roylands-Smith, secretary of the Exeter Diocesan Choral Society during the past twenty-two years, has been the gratified recipient of a cheque value £100, together with an illuminated album containing the names of the subscribers. The presentation was made by the Bishop of Exeter at a meeting held in the Chapter House, Exeter, on July 2. For thirty-two years past Mr. Roylands-Smith has conducted choral festivals in the diocese of Exeter, including the annual meeting in the cathedral since 1887.

Mr. W. A. Roberts, organist of St. Paul's Church, Princes Park, Liverpool, has been presented with an address from the congregation, and a cheque for fifty guiness, to mark the completion of twenty-five years' service of good and faithful work. At the same time the choirmen and boys gave him a suit-case with silver-mounted fittings.

A very successful festival of parish choirs was held at All Saints' Church, Evesham, on July 8, when twelve choirs from churches in the district furnished 250 voices. The Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were sung to Stanford in B flat, and the anthem was R. F. Lloyd's 'Let the righteous be glad.' The Rev. W. C. Allsebrook, vicar of Badsey, ably conducted, and Mr. A. M. Slatter, organist of All Saints', Evesham, presided at the organ. The Rev. H. H. Woodward, Precentor of Worcester Cathedral, preached an inspiring sermon.

Dr. Haydn Keeton, organist of Peterborough Cathedral, pleasantly observed the jubilee of his admittance to the choir of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, by attending the service there on June 28. On the corresponding day fifty years ago Master Keeton, aged ten, became a chorister in that royal sanctuary. It was characteristic of Sir Walter Parratt's courtesy to commemorate the occasion by inviting the ex-chorister of Windsor and the oldest, as regards length of service, cathedral organist in England, to play part of the morning service.

Mr. Lister R. Peace has obtained, after a competition adjudicated upon by Dr. A. H. Mann, the organ scholarship at Queens' College, Cambridge. Congratulations to him and his genial father, Dr. A. L. Peace.

To celebrate the Jubilee of St. Hilary's Church, Wallasey, Liverpool, a festival evensong took place on July 2. Dr. James Lyon, organist of the church, conducted a special choir of about 200 voices, and in addition to the organ, at which Dr. A. W. Pollitt presided, there were six brass instruments and drums. Dr. J. C. Bridge's setting of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C was sung, and Dr. Lyon composed a special festival anthem for the occasion, 'Blessed be the Lord God of our fathers.'

FOUR FORTHCOMING FESTIVALS.

WORCESTER.

First in point of date and in order of antiquity is the 185th Meeting of the Three Choirs, the performances as usual taking place in the Cathedral and, as regards the Wednesday evening concert, in the Public Hall. The following is the outline scheme of this venerable music-making:

Sunday afternoon, September 6. Opening service, Toccata in F, Back (arranged for orchestra by Esser); Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in B minor, Tertius Noble; anthems, Glory, honour, praise, and power, Mosart, and O Lord, Thou art my God, Lee Williams; Poem for orchestra, Finlandia, Sibelius; Organ voluntary, Festival Monologue, Wolstenholme, composed for this service and played by the composer.

Tuesday, September 8. Morning; Elijah, Mendelssohn. Evening, The Dream of Gerontius, Elgar.

Wednesday, September 9. Morning: The Kingdom, Elgar; Beyond these voices there is peace, Parry (composed for the Festival); Symphony in C minor, Brahms. Evening: (in the Public Hall). The Pierrot of the Minuet, fantastic poem for orchestra, Banlock (first performance); The Wand of Youth, Suite No. 2, Elgar (first performance); Overture, The cricket on the hearth, Mackensie; Song, 'England, my England,' Brewer (first performance), &c.

Thursday, September 10. Morning: Stabat Mater (Op. 95), Stanford; Violin concerto, Beethoven (soloist, Mischa Elman); Everyman, Walford Davies. Evening: Hymn of Faith, Ivor Atkins; Magnificat, Bach; Hymn of Praise, Mendelssohn.

Friday, September 11. Morning: Messiah, Handel. Conductor: Mr. IVOR ATKINS.

SHEFFIELD.

The programme of this, the youngest of the festivals, differs from that originally issued, Elgar's 'The Kingdom' being, from some unexplained reason, omitted. The dates of the concerts given in the Albert Hall, and principal works to be performed, are subjoined:

Monday evening, October 5. Elijah, Mendelssohn.

Tuesday morning, October 6. Beatitudes, César Franck; Pianoforte concerto in B flat minor, Tchaikovsky (soloist, Madame Carreño); Te Deum, Berlioz.

Wednesday morning, October 7. Overture in G minor, York Bowen; Everyman, Walford Davies; Concerto in E, for violin, strings, and organ, Bach (soloist, Herr Kreisler); Sea Drift, Delius (first performance in England); Till Eulenspiegel's merry pranks, Strauss.

Thursday morning, October 8. L'enfant prodigue, Debussy; Symphony in D (Haffner), Mozart; Manzoni Requiem, Verdi; New suite from the opera The Eve of Christmas, Rimsky · Korsakov; Selection from Act III., Die Meistersinger, Wagner.

Friday morning, October 9. St. Matthew Passion, Bach. Friday evening, October 9. Part I., Choral works by various composers; Part II., Choral Symphony, Beethoven.

Conductor: Mr. HENRY J. WOOD. Chorus-master: Dr. HENRY COWARD.

BRISTOL.

The twelfth musical festival in the western city will present, as heretofore, a varied and interesting programme. Here it is, in an outline form:

Wednesday, October 14. Morning: Elijah, Mendelssohn. Evening: Ode on the death of the Duke of Wellington, Stanford (first performance); Violin concertos, Bruhms and Mozart (soloist, Herr Kreisler); Songs of the Sea, Stanford, &c.

Thursday, October 15. Morning: Lay of the Bell, Max Bruch: Symphony in G minor, Kalinnikov; Watch ye, pray ye, Bach. Evening: Cantatas, Andromeda, Cyril B. Rootham (first performance), and King Olaf, Elgar.

Friday, October 16, Morning: Passion Music (Op. 45), Felix Woyrsch; Choral Symphony, Beethoven. Evening: Miscellaneous concert, to include Samuel Wesley's unaccompanied motet In exitu Israel.

Saturday Morning, October 17. Die Walkure, Wagner. Conductor: Mr. George Riseley.

NORWICH.

The twenty-ninth triennial festival will be held during the last days of October in St. Andrew's Hall. The following information relating thereto is obtained from a preliminary prospectus:

Wednesday, October 28. Morning: Dream of Gerontius, Elgar; Pathetic symphony, Tchaikovsky. Evening: Phæbus and Pan, Bach: Violin concerto, Beethoven (soloist, Herr Kreisler); Wagner selection.

Thursday, October 29. Morning: Stabat Mater, Dvorák; Symphony in G minor, Mozart: Magnificat, Bach; Hungarian Rhapsody, No. 2, Lisat. Evening: King Olaf, Elgar; Death and Transfiguration, Strauss; The blessed Damozel, Debussy; Overture, 1812, Tchaikovsky.

Friday, October 30. Morning: Variations, Elgar; Requiem, Brahms; Christmas-night, Hugo Wolf (first performance in England), &c. Evening: Prize cantata, Cleopatra, Julius Harrison; Pianoforte concerto in B flat minor, Tchaikovsky (soloist, Madame Carreño); Praise ye the Lord, Bach; Choral Symphony, Beethoven.

Saturday, October 31. Morning: Elijah, Mendelssohn. Evening: A popular concert.

Conductor: MR. HENRY J. WOOD. Chorus-master: MR. HAYDON HARE.

From a perusal of the above outline programmes it will be observed that 'Elijah' finds a place at all four festivals, thus showing a vitality which it will be difficult to explain away. Beethoven's Choral Symphony will be heard at Sheffield, Bristol, and Norwich, and two performances will be given of each of the following choral works: Magnificat, Bach, King Olaf and The Dream of Gerontius, Elgar, and Everyman, Walford Davies.

Information concerning the Musical Competition Festival movement will be found in the extra supplement given with the present issue.

MUSIC IN SYDNEY, N.S.W.

The resignation of Signor Roberto Hazon from the conductorship of the Sydney Philharmonic Society and the Sydney Amateur Orchestral Society, furnishes an opportunity for calling attention to a much esteemed musician and the Antipodean organizations with which his name has for several years been worthily associated. Born fifty-four years ago at Borgotara, Italy, Signor Hazon began his musical studies under Giovanni Rossi, director of the Scuola del Carmine, Parma. Later on, under the auspices of Verdi, he entered the Milan Conservatorium. There he remained four years, profiting by the teaching of Franco Faccio, the distinguished conductor, and Antonio Bazzini, the eminent composer and violinist. After having gained experience as an operatic conductor at the Teatro Dal Verme, Milan, and elsewhere in Italy, he went to Australia in 1886 as conductor of an Italian opera company organized by M. Simonsen, which, during a season of fourteen months, performed twenty-five different grand operas in the principal cities of Australia. He subsequently (in 1901) conducted with equal success another season of Italian opera, under the management of Mr. J. C. Williamson. After having conducted two series of orchestral concerts with professional players at Melbourne, where he resided for a short time, Signor Hazon came to Sydney in May, 1889, being engaged by Mr. George Rignold to conduct a series of twelve orchestral concerts at Her Majesty's Theatre, with the result that the oldest city in Australia became his home for eighteen happy years of his life. For five years, beginning in 1889, he conducted the Metropolitan Liedertafel of Sydney. His beneficent reign over the Philharmonic and Amateur Orchestral Societies of the capital of New South Wales must now be considered.

The present Sydney Philharmonic Society was founded in the year 1885, though an earlier organization under the same name came into existence as far back as 1854. Preceded by two conductors—Max Vogrich and Henri Kowalski-Signor Hazon was appointed to the office in July, 1889. He began his duties under most interesting conditions, as the first concert he conducted, October 2, 1889, was 'Elijah,' with Sir Charles Santley in the rôle of the Prophet, this being the first appearance in Australia of the great baritone in Mendelssohn's familiar oratorio. The performance was both artistically and financially a great success. No less a sum than £766 was realised, the largest amount then ever known in the Colony at an oratorio concert. In regard to the performance, it is recorded that 'the great point in the new conductor's interpretation was its dramatic quality. He made his singers exhibit an enthusiasm, a precision of attack, and a feeling for the charm of the tenderer passages, which convinced every listener that at last an ideal conductor had been found.' It is unnecessary to mention in detail the subsequent performances given by the Society, which went on from strength to strength. Suffice it to say that Signor Hazon had the satisfaction of first introducing Berlioz's 'Faust' to an Australian audience on May 13, 1897. His resignation of the conductorship called forth genuine regret. The annual report for 1907 stated: For the past nineteen years Signor Hazon occupied the position of conductor, a space of time covering the history of the Society within the memories of most of our subscribers and members: how he filled that position is known to everyone, and his achievements will long be remembered. As already intimated in these columns, Mr. Joseph Bradley, conductor of the Glasgow Choral Union, has been appointed to the office so worthily held by his predecessor; in taking up his duties he may be sure to uphold the traditions associated with the artistic achievements of both the Sydney and Glasgow Societies.

Signor Hazon founded the Sydney Amateur Orchestral Society early in 1892, the first concert having been given on April 27 of that year. This excellent organization, consisting of eighty performers of both sexes, has from the first had a most successful career under its founder-conductor. At its sixty-four concerts—i.e., up to September 4, 1907—there have been performed all the great symphonies, overtures, concertos, &c., in a most efficient manner, new works as well as old having been added to the large répertoire of the Society. A note to the programme-book of the last concert conducted by Signor Hazon records his devotion to the Society of his creation in the following words: 'Unselfish labour, incessant strivings, and the unremitting energy of our conductor have raised the Society from small beginnings but great aspirations to the present position of eminence and success, crowning the labours of Signor Hazon's efforts in the best and widest interests of musical art in this city.' This testimony to his beneficent influence in the cause of music in the Colony is confirmed by the Sydney Herald, which referred to him as having been 'active in all that could foster popular taste and produce musical entertainments worthy of a cultivated city.' Owing to reasons of health, Signor Hazon has returned to his native country and settled at Milan, where, as a teacher of operatic and oratorio singing and as one fully acquainted with the English language, he is sure to obtain many pupils. It is pleasant to learn from him that the people of Australia have 'a great love and talent for music.' May that devotion to the divine art deepen as the years roll on. Advance Australia! in all that appertains to the beautiful and true in music.

a remarkable performance of the work given by the Society.

WORCESTER FESTIVAL NOVELTIES.

ELGAR'S 'THE WAND OF YOUTH' (SECOND SUITE).

On the production—Queen's Hall, December 14, 1907—of the first set of pieces arranged from the incidental music devised by Sir Edward Elgar in his boyhood days for a child's play, it was announced that a second Suite, drawn from the same source, would be forthcoming. The promise has been fulfilled, and the further instalment of these juvenilia will be performed for the first time at the evening concert of the Worcester Festival, September 9, under the direction of the composer.

It may be recalled that the 'Wand of Youth (music to a child's play)' was commenced in 1869, when Sir Edward was a boy aged twelve. As in the first Suite, the pieces, six in number, have been left almost in their original form; while they have been re-scored and remodelled by the composer, we understand that no attempt has been made to modernise them unduly by too much revision.

The titles of the six pieces are as follow:

March (Allegro moderato). The little bells Scherzino (Allegro molto).

Moths and butterflies. Dance (Allegretto). Fountain dance (Allegretto comodo). The tame bear (Allegro moderato). The wild bears (Presto).

The sequence adopted is arbitrary, and has no reference to the original position of the pieces in the 'drama'; this literary effort has disappeared, together with sundry long poems and a novel written at the same period. 'Moths and butterflies' and 'The wild period. bears' are the earliest of the pieces, and remain almost exactly in their first form; others have been reconstructed from what the composer calls, without paradox, complete fragments.

Curiously enough, the Suite will be first performed in the city of which the composer is now an honorary freeman-a distinction he shares with Lord Nelsonand within a few hundred yards of the site of the cottage, now no longer standing, where the little play was rehearsed and the music conceived.

DR. BREWER'S NEW SONG.

The Gloucester organist's contribution to the festival programme is a virile setting of W. E. Henley's inspiring poem 'England, my England,' from his 'For England's sake.' (By the way, Henley, like the composer, was a Gloucester boy.) Laid out for baritone solo and the usual full orchestra, the piece displays the welcome qualities of directness and melodic interest, combined with that skilled workmanship which one naturally expects from Dr. Brewer.

Above a dominant pedal, a short introduction,

Allegro marziale, is built up on an energetic horncall which, embroidered with bustling string figures, leads into a rhythmical one-bar phrase of which considerable use is subsequently made. The voice enters immediately, above sustained chords, with a dignified strain which typifies the broad, vocal writing assigned to the soloist. The 'refrain' line, 'Round the world on your bugles blown,' is set to a significant 'call,' the brass instruments adding a short fanfare to give vraisemblance to the military picture. With the verse beginning 'Ever the faith endures, England, my England,' and with rhythmic and key changes, the music fails not to do justice to the poet's noble reminder that England demands sacrifices from her sons, and that her bugles resound on many a battlefield. Dr. Brewer employs simple Mr. Harry Evans, conductor of the Liverpool Welsh Choral Union, has been presented by the members of the choir with a full score of Elgar's 'Apostles,' as a memento of sustain interest in a composition the performance of which will be anticipated with pleasure.

THE HIGHBURY PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The Highbury Philharmonic Society has, we regret to record, ceased to exist. Founded in October, 1878, it has had a most successful career during the twenty-nine years of its existence. The first conductor was Sir Frederick Bridge, who composed expressly for the Society his cantata 'Boadicea,' first performed on May 31, 1880, and it was at Highbury that the same composer-conductor's 'Hymn to the Creator' obtained its first hearing on May 7, 1883. Dr. F. E. Gladstone composed two works specially for those music-loving Highburyans—the oratorio 'Nicodemus,' produced on December 13, 1880, and the cantata 'Constance of Calais,' on May 18, 1885. During Sir Frederick Bridge's régime the following works, in addition to others, were performed: Smart's 'Jacob,' December 15, 1879; Schubert's Mass in F, March 14, 1881; Weber's 'Euryanthe,' complete and in English, March 20, 1882; Gade's 'Psyche,' November 27, 1882; and Berlioz's 'Childhood of Christ,' December 7, 1885. In October, 1886, Mr. G. H. Betjemann became conductor, and under his experienced leadership the

In October, 1886, Mr. G. H. Betjemann became conductor, and under his experienced leadership the Society has done excellent work during the past twenty-two years. Under his baton have been given Schumann's 'Paradise and the Peri,' May, 7, 1888; Parry's 'De Profundis,' January 18, 1892, and 'Job,' January 16, 1893, both for the first time in London; Walthew's 'Pied piper of Hamelin,' March 20, 1893, and 'Ode to a nightingale,' November 23, 1897, both first public performances; Rossini's 'Moses in Egypt,' May 7, 1895; Elgar's 'Caractacus,' November 29, 1898, first time in London; Corder's 'The Sword of Argantyr,' also first time in London, on November 27, 1899, in addition to other works, twenty-two in all, for the first time in London.

At the recently held final meeting it was resolved to hand over the balance derived from the sale of the Society's assets to the testimonial fund, the object of which was to present to certain officers of the Society some mark of the esteem in which they were held, for valuable services they had rendered. amount subscribed a purse of forty guineas was presented to Mrs. C. J. Birch, who had been the efficient honorary accompanist for the entire period of the Society's existence; a ruby and pearl bracelet to Miss Berry, who played the pianoforte at the orchestral rehearsals; a silver inkstand to Mr. J. I. Berry, the honorary treasurer; a gold sovereign-purse to Mr. J. Mortimer Jones, chairman of the Committee; a stereoscope with slides to Mr. G. H. Betjemann, the esteemed conductor; a silver cigarette-box to Mr. David Watkins, honorary assistant-conductor; and a gold pencil-case to Mr. A. H. Betjemann, honorary librarian.

On this special occasion the chair was occupied by Mr. W. H. Thornthwaite, who, we regret to record, died on July 15, after a few hours' illness. In addition to being widely known as an enthusiastic amateur of music, Mr. Thornthwaite took an active part in the affairs of the Society from the commencement, first as a member of the Committee, and subsequently for a considerable time as honorary secretary. He indulged in a few reminiscences of the early history of the Society, and while expressing profound regret that it could not be continued, congratulated the members on their achievements, first under Dr. J. F. (now Sir Frederick) Bridge, and secondly under Mr. G. H. Betjemann, whose untiring efforts had raised the performances of the Society to a high pitch of excellence. Mr. Betjemann, in returning thanks, said that the Society's reputation extended far and wide. He was constantly being reminded of the important position held by the Highbury Philharmonic Society among the musical organizations of the country.

Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians. Edited by J. A. Fuller Maitland, M.A., F.S.A. Vol. iv. Q—S.

[Macmillan & Co., Ltd.]

Accuracy is a prime essential in a book of reference. And this is especially looked for in a new and revised edition of so important and expensive a publication as 'Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' a voluminous and monumental work that cannot be issued at frequent intervals. Considering the mass of information therein given, it would be futile to expect perfection in accuracy, but the rather formidable list of 'Addenda et corrigenda for vol. iii.,' printed at the end of the volume under notice, is somewhat disquieting. For instance, the corrections in the article 'Psalter' occupy nearly a column and a half. (By the way, no mention is made of the exhaustive list of inaccuracies in this 'Psalter' article compiled by Mr. William Cowan and printed in this journal.) Now this is an abstruse subject upon which students naturally expect accurate information in the pages of 'Grove': it may be said that they may ultimately get it, but at the terribly tedious cost of inserting the errata and corrigenda, which really ought not to have assumed such large proportions in this particular article; moreover, it is doubtful if all the errors have been rectified.

How does this essential stand in the present volume? Turning to the 'List of contributors' we find four names that should have been printed in italic instead of Roman type, because the writers are no longer in the flesh: they are David Baptie (d. 1906), William Henderson (d. 1891), T. L. Stillie (d. 1883), and J. Muir Wood (d. 1892). The names of the authors of the articles 'G. and E. A. W. Siboni, and 'Ludwig Stark' are not given, omissions evidently due to deletions from the earlier edition. The foot-note on p. 55 relating to' the first programme issued in Great Britain with analytical notes' repeats the erroneous information contained in vol. i., art. 'Analysis'; and the statement (on p. 261) that Brahms's 'Schicksalslied' ('Song of Destiny') was first performed in England by the Cambridge University Musical Society in 1877 is hopelessly wrong, as the present writer heard it at the Crystal Palace three years earlier. Although the article 'Schubert' has been revised, we find such foot-notes as 'Autograph in the possession of Brahms' (twice), 'Autographs with Herr Dumba' (three times). As both these good men and true have passed beyond mortal ken—Brahms in 1897 and Dumba in 1900—it would have been more satisfactory to have stated the present whereabouts of these Schubert MSS. The same remark applies to Pr. Raymund Härtel (d. 1888), the former possessor of the autographs of Schumann's three string quartets (p. 358).

The useful lists of Schubert's compositions in the first edition (though not complete there) will be missed, and Mr. Rockstro's 'Schools of composition' has also gone. So important has the symphonic poem—for better, for worse—become, that the subject hardly receives adequate treatment in twenty-seven lines. The inclusion and exclusion of names is doubtless a source of perplexity to the editor of a dictionary, but we cannot help expressing surprise that Mr. Barclay Squire has been omitted. Apart from the splendid work he has done at the British Museum for more than twenty years, the inclusion of his name would have been a graceful acknowledgment of the literary aspect of music in this country. To apportion forty-six columns between such defunct composers as Spontini and Steibelt, and to ignore some of our honoured countrymen, seems hardly fair.

More than one-fourth of the present volume is occupied with four articles—Schubert, Schumann, Symphony, and Song, all of which appeared in the previous edition. The last named, extended to 162 columns, is very badly arranged for purposes of reference. It has eighteen sub-headings, two of which are further sub-divided, and the headline 'Song' is continued throughout the entire eighty-one pages. The arrangement is neither alphabetical nor geographical. Starting from France, it takes the grand tour of Europe, excluding Germany, which brings up the rear, after England and America! An index of countries, placed at the beginning of the article, is an obvious necessity. It is to be regretted that vol. iv. does not escape the censure passed on the preceding one, in regard to the article Oratorio. We refer to the biography of Richard Strauss, which is written in a somewhat similar strain to the diatribes of J. W. Davison on Wagner.

It is pleasant to turn to the more satisfactory features of this fourth volume of a fascinating work that should be in the library of every musician and earnest lover of music. Place aux dames in the excellent articles contributed by two such competent authorities as Mrs. Newmarch and Miss Stainer, the former on masters of the Russian School, the latter on such lesser-known composers as Salvator Rosa, Sabbatini (3), Scandello, Schlick (2), Schulthesius, Sermisy, Striggio, and Strungk. Mr. E. J. Dent can be safely trusted on Alessandro Scarlatti, a sulject he has made entirely his own, and Mr. W. A. Aikin contributes a sensible article on Singing, while much antiquarian information is furnished by Mr. Frank Kidson. The printing and general get-up of the volume is all that can be desired, and while we have thought it our duty to point out certain blemishes, this instalment of the new edition of 'Grove' is as cordially welcomed as was the first quarterly part (128 pages) of the original work, issued more than thirty years ago.

CHURCH MUSIC.

Benedictus in G. By Alan Gray, Te Deum and Jubilate Deo in B flat. By John Pullein.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in A flat. By B. Luard-Selhy.

Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C. By Ronald G. Tomblin. [Novello & Co., Ltd.]

As a complement to his Te Deum in the key of G, Dr. Alan Gray has composed a Benedictus in which his ripe musicianship is evident throughout. Although the setting is modern in its treatment—the passage, 'To give light to them that sit in darkness' being a case in point—the vocal part would present no difficulties to a competent choir, and the organ part is free and varied without being over elaborate.

Mr. John Pullein, organist of St. Peter's Church, Harrogate, has furnished practical and singable settings of the morning canticles in his Service in the key of B flat. Variety and simplicity go hand in hand with melodic interest and harmonic variety, with the result that the music is such as to attract the attention of parish choirs in search of strains that are as devotional as they are effective.

There is not a superfluity of church service music that is specially written for unaccompanied singing; therefore the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis composed by Mr. Bertram Luard-Selby, and inscribed to the members of Rochester Cathedral choir, are specially welcome. The setting of the Magnificat in the key of A flat is both vocal and straightforward, vain repetitions being almost entirely absent. A good point is the antiphonal nature of the Gloria, the two sides of the choir, decani and cantoris, responding to each other and then joining in an Amen of great vigour and contrapuntal ingenuity. The Nunc dimittis, in the same key, with its solemn, low-voiced opening and full-toned Gloria—the latter different from the Magnificat—completes a service that is replete with musicianship and constructive skill.

Mr. Ronald G. T. St. Marylebone Church. Tomblin is assistant-organist of He is therefore well in touch with a good choir, and that he knows how to write for the voices his Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in the key of C bear testimony. Vigour and go characterize the music, yet there is tenderness when the words suggest that treatment, and the cessation of the organ at the phrases 'For He hath regarded' and 'He hath filled the hungry are commendable features in a setting that has more than one claim for favour in choirs and places where they sing.

The art of singing and voice declamation. Charles Santley. [Macmillan & Co., Ltd.] By Sir

Common-sense is the main characteristic of this valuable little volume. Those who turn to its pages for pictures of the vocal organs, or for dissertations on such subjects as 'the shock of the glottis,' will be disappointed. In one of the many interesting autobiographical touches in the book, his adoption.

Sir Charles tells us that Manuel Garcia 'taught singing, not surgery?! He says, 'I was a pupil of his in 1858, and a friend of his while he lived, and in all the conversations I had with him, I never heard him say a word about larynx or pharynx, glottis, or any other organ used in the production and emission of the voice. He was perfectly acquainted with their functions, but he used his knowledge for his own direction, not to make a parade of it before his pupils, as he knew it would only serve to mystify them, and could serve no good purpose in acquiring a knowledge of the art of singing.' He adds: 'My experience tells me that the less pupils know about the construction of the vocal organs the better; in fact, as I heard a master once remark, " better they should not be aware they had throats except for the purpose of swallowing their food." I am confident that great harm has been done by mixing up singing and

The above extract will serve to sample the breezy nature of the eminent singer's 'hints' contained in this valuable and unconventional contribution to the study of vocalization. In these days, when young people have so much done for them and are so disposed to 'take it easy,' Sir Charles's rousing words on the importance of work are most opportune. 'Work! work! work!' he says, 'as long as you have That is your contract with the Author of all that you are, all you have, and all you can do. Be careful to fulfil it, or . . .' No less valuable are his views on breathing. 'There is no mystery or difficulty about breathing. 'There is no mystery or difficulty about breathing.' All it requires is care in arranging convenient and appropriate places to take breath, and practising speech or song accordingly.' As to 'abdominal breathing,' he regards that as 'most comical,' and adds, 'I have in vain tried to discover whereabouts in the abdomen there exists a store room for breath.' He is no less severe on the enormities caused by careless enunciation, instancing 'Sound an alarm' as being generally interpreted Sounddannalaam.' Further quotation must, however, be restrained, as enough has been said to attract many readers to the dicta, so pleasantly expressed, of so great a master of song as Charles Santley.

Obituary.

The following deaths are recorded with regret:

On July 5, CARL DEICHMANN, aged eighty-one. For nearly sixty years Mr. Deichmann has been well known as a leading violinist in England. At the Wagner festival, held at the Royal Albert Hall in 1877, under the direction of Wagner, he shared the leader's desk with August Wilhelmj. His life-long friendship with Dr. Richter began at that time.

On July 12, at his residence, Inglemere, Hamilton Road, Reading, JOHN CHARLES BRETTELL TIRBUTT, Mus. B. Dunelm, aged fifty-one. Mr. Tirbutt did excellent work for the cause of music at Reading during the past twentynine years: as organist of All Saints' Church, conductor of the Philharmonic Society, and lecturer in music and director of musical studies at Reading College. His published compositions include a ballad, 'The phantom ship,' for chorus and orchestra, and a cantata, 'The vale of pearls,' for female voices. He will be greatly missed in the town of

THE KING AND QUEEN AT BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

On July 8 and 9, while their Majesties were staying on board the 'Victoria and Albert' yacht at Avonmouth, upon the occasion of the opening by the King of the new dock constructed for the corporation of Bristol, performances were given by the oldest and youngest of our local musical societies. On the first date the Bristol Madrigal Society, under the direction of Mr. D. W. Rootham, sarg a selection of pieces, which included the following by Pearsall, a former member: 'Great God of love' (inscribed by the author to Mr. Corfe, the first musical director of the Society), 'Ladye, when I behold,' and 'Allen-a-dale.' Another contribution was 'A shepherd in a glade,' by Cyril B. Rootham, son of the conductor, which gained The Musical Times prize competed for in 1904, a composition which has become a favourite with the choir. At the close of the concert the King and Queen expressed their gratification at the pleasure afforded them, and Mr. E. A. Harvey, the president, and Mr. D. W. Rootham were presented to their Majesties. An additional composition was asked for, and the choir sang Mendelssohn's 'O hills! O vales!'

On the following night the Bristol Harmonic Male Voice Choir also sang on board the royal yacht. The programme included such descriptive pieces as Laurent de Rillé's 'Martyrs of the arena,' and Ambroise Thomas's 'Tyrol,' both of which were rendered with considerable animation. The King, who was particularly interested in the latter piece, conversed with Mr. J. Jenkins, the conductor, respecting the constitution of the choir, a body of working men. His Majesty spoke highly of the manner in which they sang.

On the afternoon of July 9, as the royal procession passed through the city, about 10,000 children, accommodated on stands erected upon Durdham Down, sang 'God save the King,' under the direction of Mr. George Riseley, during which their Majesties' carriage was brought to a standstill.

MILTON'S 'COMUS' AT CAMBRIDGE.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

In connection with the Milton tercentenary commemoration, a most interesting presentation of 'Comus' was given at the New Theatre on July 10. The performance was a private one, and the audience was eminently distinguished, including many literary celebrities. A public repetition of the piece was given on the following day.

the piece was given on the following day.

The chief features of the production were dignity and reserve. The performers were all members of the University or Newnham College, but their names were not announced. Criticism of their efforts is therefore out of place, but all may be commended for the care and earnestness with which they had evidently prepared their work. We may particularly commend the interpretations of 'The lady' and 'The elder brother.'

It is understood that owing to the lack of needful vocal skill on the part of the performers, it was impossible to give the whole of the music composed by Henry Lawes. The only song given in its entirety was 'Sweet echo,' sung with charming effect apparently behind the scenes. The music of 'Sabrina fair' was played, not sung, while the words were recited by the actor. The appearance of Sabrina was accompanied by the music Lawes composed to the words 'To the ocean now I fly.' This song was rightly omitted, as involving a mutilation of Milton's beautiful epilogue. Lawes has taken considerable liberties with the words, and it is surprising that he should have allowed himself to do this. It is a pity that more of the original music could not have been given, but it is obviously very difficult to find amateurs who can both act and sing adequately. Moreover the commemoration was of Milton, and, if anyone were to suffer, it certainly ought not to be the poet. The music, under the direction of Mr. E. J. Dent, who had selected and arranged it, was played by an amateur band of strings, and proved to be one of the most satisfactory features of the production. In addition to the pieces by Henry Lawes, there was a march by his brother, William Lawes, and some dances—a Selebrand, Almayne, and Corrant—from Elizabeth Rogers's Virginal Book in the British Museum. There were also Morris dances played by a single fiddle on the stage, and a prelude, the 'Satyre's mask,' from another British Museum MS. The charmingly executed dances contributed not a little to the success of the evening's entertainment.

It is to be hoped that a representation of 'Comus' will be given in London during this tercentenary year of Milton's birth.

THE OPERA.

Although no new opera has been mounted this season at Covent Garden, the general excellence of the performances, the several revivals, and the first appearances here of sundry artists of Continental repute, have maintained interest in the season's doings.

On June 27 Miss Lalla Miranda made her reappearance, and by her impersonation of Gilda in Verdi's 'Rigoletto' showed that she had advanced in her art, weally and histrionically. Concerning the rest of the cast it is sufficient to say that the principal characters were sustained by Madame Edna Thornton and Messrs. McCormack, Sammarco, Marcoux, and Gillibert.

After resting for four years, Verdi's 'Otello' was revived on July 1, with a particulary interesting cast, Mr. Zenatello making his initial effort as the dusky Moor, and Madame Melba practically appearing as Desdemona for the first time, since she had only played it once previously, and that sixteen years ago. Mr. Scotti was Iago, Mr. John McCormack played Cassio, Madame Edna Thornton fulfilled the duties of Desdemona's tiring maid, and the characters of Lodovico, Roderigo, and Montano were respectively sustained by Messrs. Marcoux, Zucchi, and Crabbe. Madame Melha sang beautifully, and acted with greater spontaneity than usual.

As Don José in the performance of 'Carmen,' on July 2,

As Don José in the performance of 'Carmen,' on July 2, Mr. Marak achieved success, the Bohemian artist singing with greater intensity and fervour than previously. Another new-comer, Madame Rider-Kelsey, made a particularly favourable impression by her charming singing as Micaela. Madame Maria Gay repeated her powerful portrayal of the Cigarette Girl, and Mr. Scandiani appeared as Escamillo.

Another revival that attracted much attention was Giordano's 'Fédora,' originally produced at Milan in 1898. The title-tôle was the second part in which the new Roman prima donna, Miss Cavalieri, had been heard, and her impersonation confirmed the impression that her success depended quite as much upon her acting as upon her singing. Miss Cavalieri appeared to greater advantage as Fédora than as Manon, in which she made her début. A new tenor, Mr. Garbin, made his début as the persecuted hero, Loris Ipanow, with fair success.

The revival of Meyerbeer's 'Huguenots,' on July 11, attracted one of the largest audiences of the season, probably owing to the fact that Madame Tetrazzini made her first appearance here as Marguerite de Valois. Miss Destinn impersonated Valentine, and the parts of Raoul, De Nevers San Bris and Marcel were respectively sustained by Messrs. Zenatello, Scotti, Nivette (a new baritone of great ability) and Marcoux. This was one of the finest casts that and Marcoux. could be secured, and the performance was memorable. On July 15, Gounod's 'Faust,' played for the first time this season, introduced an English prima donna, the Hon. Mrs. Cecil Edwardes, sister-in-law to Lord Kensington, who made her stage debut under the name of 'Madame Edvina.' The lady's voice, a mezzo-soprano of powerful and musical quality, was somewhat heavy for the part of Marguerite, and there seemed to be an inability to secure delicate gradations of tonal force, but allowance must be made for so trying an ordeal; at the same time, dramatic perception was distinctly shown, particularly in the church scene. Mr. Bonci was admirable as the rejuvenated hero, Miss Caroline Hatchard sang well as Siebel, although her voice is too light for the part, Mr. Nivette confirmed good impressions by his intelligent embodiment of Mephistopheles, and Madame Edna Thornton appeared for the first time as Martha.

A powerful performance of Puccini's 'La Tosca' took place on July 18, when Miss Cavalieri gave an extraordinarily realistic personation of the name part.

There only remains to add that the duties of conducting have been ably discharged by Mr. Campanini and Mr. Panizza. The season has been specially notable for the number of British artists personating principal parts. This we are specially glad to place on record.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The most memorable performance at the concert given by the pupils of the Royal Academy of Music at Queen's Hall, on June 24, was that of Saint-Saëns's Pianoforte concerto in C minor, No. 4, the solo-part being rendered in a bright and intelligent manner and with considerable executive skill by Miss Dorothy Grinstead. An orchestral piece, 'Variations on an Irish air,' by Miss Eleanor G. Rudall, testified to this lady's perception of a good tune and skill in instrumentation, and 'The outlaw's song,' by Mr. Eric Coates, well sung by Mr. Carlton Brough, has elements of popularity.

The annual distribution of prizes took place at Queen's Hall on July 17, when the Duchess of Wellington handed the awards to the successful candidates. Sir Alexander Mackenzie, in his address, had a pleasant task, inasmuch as the progress of the institution in the past academic year had been such as to justify mutual congratulation. Amongst the donors mentioned were Mrs. Threlfall who, in memory of her late husband's sympathy with the Academy to which he devoted so much time and care, has decided to give an annual sum of £125; Mrs. Moller gives a yearly prize of five guineas for the best pianist, male or female; and Mr. Lesley Alexander has given £500 for the encouragement of ensemble playing. In his remarks on current events, Sir Alexander seemed to think a brighter time was in store for British musicians; and in the engagement of native singers at Covent Garden to see the 'materialisation of the phantom of English Opera.

A new examination will come into existence at Christmas next. It is entitled 'Voice culture and class-singing for boys and girls,' but the expected examinees are 'persons who are or desire to become engaged in voice culture and class-singing for girls and boys.' A syllabus of the examination can be obtained from the secretary of the Royal Academy of Music.

Mr. Stewart Macpherson is announced to give a course of lectures at the institution on Wednesday afternoons during Michaelmas term, the subject of his discourses being 'Form in music.'

The following awards have been made:

Charles Lucas Prize (Composition) to Eleanor C. Rudall (London). Schloesser Prize (Accompanying) to Kathleen Thomson (Bristol). Frederick Westlake Memorial Prize (Pianoforte) to Helen M.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Remarkable variety characterized the programme of the orchestral concert given by the students in the College concert-hall on July 21, under the direction of Sir Charles Stanford. The spirit and sympathy with which were played Beethoven's eighth Symphony, and—happy thought—a waltz by Johann Strauss and a polka by Josef Strauss, bore witness to the versatility of those enthusiastic young instrumentalists. Further variety in the programme was furnished by a new Rhapsody for orchestra, composed and conducted by Mr. Frank Bridge. In this instance the clever composer does not seem to have anything very fresh to say, but he has written an effective and brilliant piece of a conventional Oriental nature that attracts attention by its strongly marked rhythms, and holds it by the glitter and contrasts of the orchestration. The work delighted the listeners, particularly the younger members of the audience, and Mr. Bridge was most enthusiastically applauded.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

More than usual interest pertained to the performances given by the students of the Operatic Class at the Guildhall School of Music on Land Countries Class at the Guildhall School of Music on June 25 and 26, owing to the work chosen being Gluck's 'Iphigenia in Tauris,' the composer's final and most advanced effort in operatic reform. It is chiefly in his treatment of recitative and in the approach to the arias that Gluck's foresight of future requirements is most perceivable. There is also a nobility in the melodies which must have been astonishing to 18th century listeners, and the dramatic vein which runs through the music obviously appealed to the young exponents at the Guildhall School. Miss Barwell-Holbrook, in the name-part, showed lively intelligence and made excellent use of a sympathetic voice, and the devoted friends, Pylades and Orestes, were impersonated with marked ability by Mr. Edwin Lewis and Mr. Robert Carr. Miss Lilian Allen as Diana and Miss Helen Duncan as Clytemnestra, and Mr. James Saker (Thoas), also contributed in measurable degree to the success of the representation. The dances of fairies and the stage management generally reflected great credit on Mr. B. Soutten, while Mr. Richard H. Walthew again proved himself an alert and capable conductor. A special feature of the students' concert given at the City of London School on July 8, was the production of an Overture by Miss Ethel Scarborough, who conducted it. This young lady has previously shown her gift for musical expression, notably in a Pianoforte concerto played at a The overture is more ambitious in preceding concert. design and is instinct with earnest feeling. It is a work of promise rather than achievement; but it is a praiseworthy composition, and entitles the fair writer to every encouragement. The programme opened with Gounod's well-nigh forgotten Symphony in E flat, No. 2, a melodious if somewhat weak work. This was conducted by the Principal

The past has shown that, with a few exceptions, the works performed have been those of promise rather than fulfilment. This was the case on July 14, at the concert given at Queen's Hall, albeit several compositions possessed an excellence that merits their performance elsewhere. In one instance—an effective set of nine Variations with finale on a Sarabande by Handel, composed by Dr. James Lyonthis suggested course has been anticipated, since the work had previously been performed in the provinces. A fantasy overture, entitled 'From the West country,' by Mr. Fritz Hart, should find a welcome in the West of England, for it is built up with genuine folk-tunes of this district, melodies that are treated with a skill which results in the production of an attractive piece. Another orchestral fantasia, called 'Morar,' by Mr. Paul Corder, stated to have been written in the Western Highlands, shows that this young composer is sensitive to surrounding influences, and that he has admirable command of the orchestra; but over-development suggests that he stayed rather too long at 'Morar.' Pianoforte concerto in F sharp minor, by Mr. Montague Phillips, cannot claim great originality in melodic invention or construction, but the work shows a keen sense of what is effective, of the right place for climaxes, and an exuberant if somewhat superficial spirit that, with Miss Irene Scharrer at the pianoforte, fully accounted for the enthusiastic nature of the applause it elicited. Miss Emily Lucas's scena, 'Maud,' for soprano and orchestra, the words from Tennyson's well-known poem, is interesting as an example of the excellence of the musical training at the Royal Normal College for the Blind. The vocal part of the work is here and there unnecessarily difficult, and it says much for the skill of Miss Gladys Honey that the scena was so well received. More grateful to the singer were 'Songs of Selma,' by Mr. John St. A. Johnson, who shows great versatility in the appropriateness of his music to three poems of widely different style and sentiment. The London Symphony Orchestra was specially engaged for the occasion. the exception of the orchestral accompaniments of the songs, which were conducted by Sir Charles Stanford, each work was presented under the baton of its respective composer.

OLD PASTORAL MUSIC.

Madame Wanda Landowska visited London two years ago, when the two recitals she gave at Queen's Hall proved her to be an exceptionally fine performer on the harpsichord, as well as a clever pianist. On July 6 she gave a recital at the Royal Academy of Music, which had been jointly organized by the International Musical Society and the Concert-Goers' Club. Her interesting programme was devoted to 'Pastoral Music of the 17th and 18th centuries.' Part I. was entitled 'The Forest,' and bird music by Couperin and Rameau, together with the two characteristic cuckoo pieces of Pasquini and Daquin, also John Bull's 'The King's Hunt' were as appropriate as they were attractive. included some delicious unpublished 'Bergerettes' composed by d'Anglebert, and Martini's dainty 'Gavotte des Moutons'; while in Part III., 'The Fair,' with its Bransles, by Francisque, and various old dances by Louis Couperin and Chambonnières, were particularly quaint and animated.

Madame Landowska's performances were greatly enjoyed.

Miss Lenora Sparkes contributed songs by Caccini,

Alessandro Scarlatti and Henry Purcell. The Lord Chief Justice (Lord Alverstone), who was in the chair, spoke highly of the charm of this old-world music and of the lady's admirable interpretation thereof.

'H.M.S. PINAFORE.'

Those who attended the latest revival of this delightful English opera on July 14 at the Savoy Theatre, must have felt how genuine wit and humour can triumph over time and fashion. It was in 1878 that this example of the craftsman-ship of Sir W. S. Gilbert and Sir Arthur Sullivan was launched, and although the mode of building has changed since then—not, alas, entirely for the better—the quaintness of idea, the truth of expression, and the delightful directness of means to end are as fresh as ever.

The company was happy in having Mr. Rutland Barrington, the original Captain Corcoran, and Mr. H. A. Lytton, who, although not a member of the early caste, personated Dick Deadeye in the previous revival. W. Workman, who embodied Sir Joseph Porter, also showed he had the true Gilbert and Sullivan spirit. Miss Elsie Spain, as Josephine, did justice to the ballad 'Sorry her lot,' and Miss Louie Rene and Miss Jessie Rose were capable exponents of Little Buttercup and Hebe, as also Messrs. Henry Herbert and Leicester Tunks, who respectively impersonated Ralph and the Boatswain. The ensemble was excellent, as it was bound to be with Mr. François Cellier conducting. The rehearsals had the invaluable supervision conducting. The re of Sir W. S. Gilbert.

CRYSTAL PALACE FESTIVALS.

The Tonic Sol-fa Association gave two concerts with large choirs on June 27. There were over 5,000 children in the junior choir, and the singing was exceptionally good. Rarely, if ever, has so excellent a juvenile choir performed on the great orchestra. Most of the children came from the East of London, where the music in the schools is well looked after by all concerned. Each little singer had to possess a sight-singing certificate as a condition of membership of the choir. Mr. Filmer Rook, who has developed great skill in managing masses of children, was the conductor. The adult choir of about 1,500 voices, assisted by a large orchestra, supply the needful strains, original or arranged, for the gave a programme which included selections from Purcell's various episodes. For the Dover Pageant, Mr. H. J. Taylor, 'King Arthur' and Sullivan's 'The Prodigal Son,' which were fairly effective. Some part-songs were also sung smoothly and tastefully. Mr. L. C. Venables ably conducted, and Mr. H. W. Weston was an efficient organist. and Mr. H. W. Weston was an efficient organist. The arrangements were in the capable hands of Mr. T. H. Warner, the general secretary.

The Nonconformist Choir Union held its demonstration on July 4. There was a record attendance of the choir, which on this occasion numbered over 4,000 adult singers, and the singing showed excellent training. The programme consisted of a varied selection of anthems and part-songs. Dr. Macnamara, M.P., distributed the prizes won at the choral competition, and on behalf of a number of subscribers he presented a solid silver shield and a book-case to Mr. E. Minshall, who is retiring from the conductorship of the Union, and to Miss Minshall a gold bracelet and a watch. The numerous friends of Mr. Minshall will wish The numerous friends of Mr. Minshall will wish him much happiness in his retirement after many years' service.

The National Temperance concerts were given on July 11. A juvenile choir of over 5,000 singers performed a programme that proved to be popular with the audience. It included what was described as a concert scene, 'Britain's salutation to temperance.' Mr. S. H. Cooper conducted, and Mr. F. Wilson Parish was organist. The adult concert was under the conductorship of Mr. W. E. Green, of Portsmouth, and the programme included 'Fixed in His everlasting seat' and 'Martyrs of the arena,' &c. The hon. secretary, Mr. A. H. Rogers, of Ware, had charge of the general arrangements of the day's proceedings.

The competitions held at the above festivals are reported in the Competition Record which forms one of the extra supplements to our present issue.

MR. ARTHUR M. FRIEDLÄNDER'S CONCERT.

The difficulty of obtaining a hearing of new works is so great that sympathy naturally goes out to a composer who boldly becomes his own impresario. Mr. A. M. Friedländer is director of the choir at the Bayswater Synagogue, and for the services there he has written much excellent music. He is also the composer of works of important dimension. Two of these, a sacred cantata entitled 'The return to Zion, and a setting of Swinburne's 'Ode to Music,' were performed at his concert given at Queen's Hall on June 23. The cantata is laid out for tenor and bass soli, chorus and orchestra. One of its best numbers is a prayer for tenor solo, having for its foundation a melody used in the Synagogue. There is also a well-written fugue and an imposing finale. The music to the 'Ode' is in the same style as the cantata—broad, diatonic phrases being developed in a straightforward and easily comprehended manner. The soloists in the former work were Mr. Ben Davies and Mr. Lane Wilson, and the services of Madame Donalda were secured for the solo portions in the Ode. Both choral novelties were conducted by Mr. Allen Gill, who brought with him a large contingent of his fine choir from the Alexandra Palace. Miss Alice Manderville introduced two pleasing new songs, severally entitled 'We'll go no more a-maying 'and 'The nightingale,' by Mr. Landon Ronald, who directed impressive performances of Mendelssohn's 'Fingal's Cave' overture and Wagner's 'Siegfried Idyll.'

PAGEANT MUSIC.

Pageants, of which there are so many nowadays, primarily depend upon their spectacular splendour for success and popularity. The 'show' is the thing, if the sun will only smile upon it! Music, however, occupies a prominent place in these ceremonials. This was the case at the Gloucestershire Historical Pageant at Cheltenham, and the Dover Pageant, both held last month, the former from July 6 to II, and the latter taking place on the last five days of the month and the first day of August. At the Gloucestershire town Mr. C. J. Phillips was Master of the Music,' and three local musicians—Mr. Ernest A. Dicks, Mr. Lewis Hann, and Mr. Heller Nicholls-undertook to the borough organist, composed and arranged the music, both vocal and instrumental, in a volume published by Messrs. Weekes & Co. To judge of the music specially composed for these occasions, apart from the processions and the rest of the spectacular element, would scarcely be fair: suffice it to say that no pains seem to have been spared in order to increase the enjoyment and effectiveness of these Pageants by invoking the aid of the divine art.

London Concerts.

A violin recital of great antiquarian interest was given on June 29, at Bechstein Hall, by Mr. Alessandro Certani, his first appearance in London. This artist has devoted himself first appearance in London. This artist has devoted himself to bringing to light well-nigh forgotten and in some cases unknown works by Italian composers of the 18th century. Ilis programme was most interesting, and his interpretations warmly in sympathy with the old-world music. All the works he brought forward were unpublished. Several of them deserve to be printed, particularly a Sonata in A minor, composed by Francesco Maria Veracini (1685-1750), and a Pastorale by Giuseppe Tartini (1690-1750), both of them instinct with the spirit of their period.

Miss Marie Antoinette Aussenac made so marked a success at her pianoforte recital on July 14 at Queen's Hall, that it is probable we shall hear her again in the autumn. Trained at the Paris Conservatoire, where she gained the first-prize for pianoforte playing, Miss Aussenac happily combines the vivacity of her nation with sympathetic subtlety, a combination of gifts that invest her interpretations with charm and personality. The young artist—she is only seventeen—was particularly happy in her rendering of Chopin's music, and it says much for her command of expression, that her performances of works by other composers did not compare unfavourably with the violin playing by Mr. Mischa Elman, who also contributed to the afternoon's music.

Of the many singers who have claimed attention this summer, encouragement is to be extended specially to Miss Laura Evans, who gave a recital at Bechstein Hall on July 9. Her soprano voice is musical and powerful, and except for an almost persistent vibrato her singing was marked by excellent style and personal charm, the latter an asset to be by no means undervalued.

The Orpheus Choral Society, Hampstead, completed its eighth season with a concert at the Hampstead Conservatoire. The programme included the 'Gloria' from Bach's B minor Mass, Schubert's 23rd Psalm, 'Minnelied' (Brahms), a chorale from 'Die Meistersinger' (Wagner), and the humorous cantata by Dr. Walford Davies entitled 'The three jovial huntsmen,' in addition to some old madrigals. Mr. Claud Powell was the able conductor, and the choir was well supported by the following soloists:
Miss Ethel Robinson, Miss Hayward-Webb, Mr. Courtenay Mostyn (vocalists), Miss Louise Perrott (violin), Miss Löis Barker (pianoforte), whose playing calls for special mention, and Miss Clare Powell (recitations).

The Promenade concerts at Queen's Hall are announced The Promenade concerts at Queen's Hall are announced to be given from August 15 to October 24, under the conductorship, as heretofore, of Mr. Henry J. Wood. The following works by British composers will be produced: Symphony in E flat, Balfour Gardiner; Concerto in D for violoncello and orchestra, Percy H Miles: Concerto in G minor for pianoforte and orchestra, York Howen; Suite for orchestra, 'A village suite,' Luard Selby; Prelude to Agamemnon, W. H. Bell; and Two short pieces for orchestra, 'Age and youth,' A. Herbert Brewer.

Foreign Motes.

The principal rôles for the forthcoming festivals have just been distributed as follows: Rheingold: Wotan, Soomer, of Leipzig; Loge, Briesemeister, of Berlin; Alberich, Dawison, of Hamburg; Mime, Hans Breuer, of Vienna; Fricka, Frau Louise Reuss-Belce, of Dresden; and Freia, Frau Rusche, from Hanover. Valkyrie: Siegmund, von Bary, from Dresden; Sieglinde, Frau Fleischer-Edel, from Hamburg, and Frau Leffler-Burckard, from Wiesbaden; and Brunnhilde, Frau Gulbranson, from Christiania. Siegfried: Siegfried, A. Burgstaller, from Holzkirchen; and Fainer, Karl Braun, from Wiesbaden; the other soles as above. Götterdämmerung: Siegfried, A. Burgstaller; and Waltraute, Frau Krauss-Osborne and Frau Fleischer-Edel. Parsifal: Parsifal, Burrian, from Dresden, and M. A. Hadwiger; Kundry, Mesdames Leffler-Burckard and E. Walker, from Hamburg; Gurnemanz, Hincklef and Krauss, from Munich; and Klingsor, Berger, Schutzendorf and Soomer. Lohengrin: Lohengrin, von Bary and Charles Dalmorès; Elsa, Frau Fleischer-Edel; and Ortrud, Mesdames Gulbranson and Walker.

According to the official communication of the general director of the Royal Opera House, Strauss's new music drama 'Elektra' will be produced in the autumn.

HAMBURG.

Carl Heinrich Läeisz, who died in 1903, bequeathed a sum of £40 000 for the purpose of erecting a concert hall. To this his widow added a further sum of £10,000. The magnificent building, containing an orchestra capable of holding five hundred persons and a hall seating 1,900 persons, has just been inaugurated. There is also a small hall for chamber music, which will accommodate an audience of 500. The foyer contains a colossal bust of Brahms, by Max Klinger, in addition to busts of Bulow, Joachim, and Clara Schumann.

MADRID.

Last winter, capellmeister Walter Rabl was engaged to conduct 'Die Walküre.' He is again retained for the forthcoming season, when the whole of the 'Ring' will be

MANNHEIM.

Arnold Mendelssohn's comic opera 'Die Minneburg' is to be produced here next season.

Lina Ramaan, the biographer of Franz Liszt, recently celebrated, in a quiet way, the 75th anniversary of her birth.

NEW YORK.

A treaty has been concluded between Humperdinck and Andreas Dippel, director of the Metropolitan Opera House, whereby the latter has acquired the rights of producing the composer's three-act opera 'Königskinder.' The work will be given during the forthcoming season, with Miss Farrar in the title-rôle, and Herr Humperdinck is expected to be present.

PARIS.

The first Prix de Kome has been won by M. André Gailhard, aged twenty-three, son of the former director of the Opéra; in 1906 he won the second prize. No premier second grand prix was given, but a deuxième second grand prix was awarded to Mlle. Nadia Boulanger, aged twenty, daughter of Ernest Boulanger, a former Prix de Rome, and grand-daughter of Madame Boulanger, who, at the beginning of last century, was one of the glories of the Opéra Comique. It has been stated that Mile. Boulanger is the first woman who has obtained a prize at the Rome competition; Mile. Hélène Fleury, however, won a second prize three years ago.

PHILADELPHIA.

A bust of Haydn was inaugurated in Fairmont Park on June 6. All the authorities of the city, the officers and crew of the 'Bremen,' which was then in harbour, together with the German Consul, were present. A choir numbering a thousand voices also attended the ceremony, at which we may be sure 'God preserve the Emperor' was sung.

The existence of the Joachim concerts having come to a termination through the lamented death of Dr. Joachim, the executive committee, after careful consideration, have decided to preserve the organization and experience of their association by reconstituting the latter under the name of the Classical Concert Society. The object of the new Society is to continue to provide the holding of regular series of concerts at which principally chamber music, arranged upon comprehensive schemes, will be performed. A series of weekly concerts, eight in number, is announced to take place between October 21 and December 9. Seven of these, devoted to chamber music, will be at Bechstein Hall; and at the eighth concert—consisting of orchestral and choral works, and to be given at Queen's Hall—the Bach Choir will co-operate in a performance of Brahms's 'Song of Destiny,' under the direction of Dr. H. P. Allen.

The Brighton Municipal Orchestra gave an excellent concert at the Dome on July 8, when the programme consisted entirely of selections from the compositions of Mr. Edward German, who conducted. It included the overtures to 'Richard III.' and 'Romeo and Juliet, three 'Country Dances,' the three dances from 'Henry VIII.,' the symphonic puem 'Hamlet,' the Welsh Rhapsody, and a selection from 'Merrie England.' Miss Lenora Sparkes was the solo vocalist. The performance was a great success, and over 500 persons were refused admission.

The Bexhill Musical Society gave its last concert of the season on June 25 at the Kursaal. The principal items of the programme were 'The Jackdaw of Rheims' (W. H. Speer) for chorus and orchestra, Max Bruch's Violin concerto in G minor, the solo part cleverly played by Miss Ruth Clarkson, Stanford's overture to 'Shamus O'Brien,' Mozart's overture to 'Figaro,' and Sullivan's three dances from 'The Tempest.' There was a full orchestra, led by Mr. Belinski. Mr. G. Bowden was the solo vocalist, and Dr. W. H. Speer conducted.

Mr. William Short, principal trumpet-player in the King's Band, has been engaged as chief musical adjudicator for the National Eisteddfod of Australasia, to be held at Ballarat in October next. Before he returns to England, in February, 1909, he will adjudicate at competitions to be held at Christchuych, New Zealand.

Mr. E. Roberts West, honorary conductor of the Leamington and Kenilworth Madrigal Societies, has recently been presented by the members with an elaborate writing desk, together with a case of pipes, in recognition of his much-appreciated work during many years in connection with the two Societies.

Miss Lucy Broadwood having resigned the honorary secretaryship of the Folk-Song Society, the duties have been kindly undertaken by Mrs. Walter Ford. In future the headquarters of the Society will be at 19, Berners Street, where all communications should be addressed.

Mr. W. Milne Gibson, of Aberdeen, has recently been presented with a testimonial, consisting of a cheque for £56, subscribed for by friends and admirers in recognition of the good work he has done for the cause of music during many years in the Granite City.

Mr. Frank Radcliffe, of Stalybridge, has passed the final examination for the degree of Doctor of Music at the Victoria University of Manchester. The examiners were Sir Frederick Bridge, Dr. Walter Carroll and Dr. Henry Westen

The Southport Vocal Union—a celebrated male-voice choir of Lancashire—intend to give a series of concerts in Paris next Easter, under the direction of their able conductor, Mr. J. C. Clarke.

Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor is composing the incidental music to Mr. Stephen Phillips's 'Faust,' to be produced by Mr. Tree in September.

Mr. George R. Ceiley has been appointed professor of solo-singing at the Battersea Polytechnic.

Errata. June issue, p. 377, col. 2, lines 7 and 8 from the end, for Irish clergymen' read 'Irishmen,' as Nicholas Brady only of the two versifiers was a clergyman; p. 378, col. 2, line 1, delete 'the Rev.'

Answers to Correspondents.

J. Y.—So far as we know, Sir Arthur Sullivan's harmonization of Dr. E. J. Hopkins's tune 'Ellers' ('Saviour, again to Thy dear name we raise') is not published separately. In its original form ('The Supplemental Hymn and Tune Book,' 1869) it is for voices in unison, with a varied accompaniment for every verse. A four-part version by the composer appeared in the Bradford Tune Book (1872), and a different harmonization (for voices) was given in Church Hymns (1874), edited by Sir Arthur Sullivan. As the latter harmonies are assigned to Sullivan in the 'Congregational Psalmist' (1875), and his permission was obtained for their use, it may be assumed that they were made by him for 'Church Hymns.'

H. E. T.—Your ambition to become a doctor of music is most praiseworthy. The conditions, which vary at different Universities, will be found set forth in the 'Roll of the Union of Graduates in Music.' We fear it is impossible to give 'an estimate as to how many years it would take for a fairly good pianist to prepare for the first examination, providing him to be able to devote about eight hours a day to study.' You are probably unaware that pianoforte-playing is not a subject that is required at examinations for University degrees in music. As to the methods of study, you should consult a good teacher, who is familiar with the 'ins-and-outs' of these examinations.

A. B. C.—In order to obtain 'a picture showing a large church organ to advantage,' your best plan will be to get one of the fine organ cases in the city churches photographed, and then get the print enlarged by the Autotype Company. The views of the two organ cases given in our July issue (from Mr. T. F. Bumpus's book on London Churches) might guide you in your choice. See also the view of the organ in St. Paul's Cathedral (north case) given in our issue of March, 1907, p. 157. Probably the photographer, Mr. W. H. Welsh (16A, Bouverie Street, E.C.) could supply you with an enlargement of this excellent photograph, or he would photograph any particular organ that takes your fancy.

BAR.—(1) The principal vocalists at the first performance of Sullivan's oratorio 'The Light of the World' were Mesdames Titiens and Trebelli, and Messrs. Sims Reeves, Cummings, and Santley. (2) Mr. Charles Lockey died at Hastings on December 3, 1901. (3) The song that Queen Victoria sang to Mendelssohn, in 1842, and to his accompaniment, was not the Frühlings-lied in B flat (Op. 47, No. 3), but 'Schöner und schöner schmückt sich!' ('Italien,' Op. 8, No. 3) She also sang his 'Pilgerspruch' ('Lass dich nur,' Op. 8, No. 5).

AMBITIOUS.—Cornets for general use in orchestral, military, and brass bands are made in B flat, with an extra shank for A natural. Cornets in C are only intended for amateurs desirous of rendering vocal music (with pianoforte accompaniment) easily, without the trouble of transposing. The catalogue price of good instruments by London makers of repute, such as Messrs. Boosey & Co., ranges from about four to nine guineas, but cheaper instruments can be bought. Beware of cornets advertised under special or fancy names.

C. H.—'The best way to bring singers, well-trained, to the front for good class engagements?' Ay, there's the rub! So great is the competition nowadays that good class engagements are in a bad way. There is always room at the top, however, and anyone with top notes like Tetrazzini, or the possessor of a vocal organ like Melba, need not despair of being in great demand. Unfortunately, well-trained singers are often third class.

GAMBA.—There are 'short comprehensive biographies' of Barnby, Dykes, Goss, and Sullivan in the 'Dictionary of National Biography.' Biographical articles have appeared in this journal of Barnby (March, 1896), Goss (April and June, 1901), and Sullivan (December, 1900, and subsequent issues). The Rev. Canon Fowler has written the 'Life' of Dr. Dykes, published by Mr. John Murray in 1897.

ORGAN BLOWING.—'The average cost of blowing by hydraulic power and electric power respectively' would vary considerably in different places; as would 'the quantity of water or electricity, as the case may be, required per hour to blow a three-manual organ situated in the west gallery.' In some places the pressure from the water mains is insufficient to meet the required demands of the bellows.

- T. A. S.—Your copy, dated 1797, appears to be a later edition of 'Philomela,' first published, according to Eitner, in 1684. The same authority states that the author, Johannes Martinus, was a minister at Remüs. Nothing more seems to be known of him. There is a copy of the 1684 edition of the book in the British Museum Library.
- C. E. L. According to Hans von Bülow the term 'Tedesca' has reference to waltz rhythm, and invites changes of time. In addition to the well-known example you quote—the Sonatina in G for pianoforte, Op. 79—Beethoven also uses it in the fifth movement (3-8) of the B flat Quartet for strings (Op. 130); it is there headed 'Alla danza tedesca.'

LEVENSHULME.—Thin lips are usually considered to be an advantage to flute-players, but a good deal depends upon the support given by the teeth. You should take a few lessons from a good teacher. He would soon tell whether a pupil was naturally disqualified as regards producing a good quality of tone.

- J. F. C.—Is it worth while to draw comparisons as to the merits of the two operas you name? Why not enjoy the music of both works, and let your 'little argument' with your friend aid in that direction, 'without prejudice,' as the lawyers say?
- F. H.—The information on the label of your violin may not tell the truth, although we hope, for your sake, it does. You should submit the instrument to Messrs. W. E. Hill & Sons, of New Bond Street, who, in return for a fee, would give you reliable information concerning its maker, value, &c.
- E. E. S.—Announcements of competition festivals are given from time to time in the School Music Review. The nearest to your town are the competitions to be held at Warminster (Secretary, Miss I. Luke, The Knoll, Malmesbury), and Malmesbury (Secretary, Mrs. Maurice, Wykeham House, Marlborough).
- A. S. R.—Perhaps it will be time enough to decide upon the examination after you have 'gone in thoroughly for theory.' Your teacher will then be able to advise you as to the most suitable testing-place of your acquired theoretical knowledge.
- D.—The death dates you ask for are as follows: Frederic Clay, November 24, 1889; Alfred Cellier, December 28, 1891; Dr. John Naylor (of York Minster), May 15, 1897. Mr. John Francis Barnett is happily still in the flesh.

BEAUTY RETIRE.—Sir Frederick Bridge's book 'Samuel Pepys, a lover of Musicke,' is published by Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. It was issued in 1903, price 5s.

SEBASTIAN.—Your best plan will be to apply to Dr. Walford Davies direct, as by that means you will obtain reliable information.

H. M.—We are afraid that the four volumes of Latrobe's 'Selections of Sacred Music' are not of any intrinsic value.

INDISPENSABLE FOR A LIBRARY OR AS A REFERENCE BOOK.

NOVELLO'S COLLECTION

Crown 8vo, 822 pp., cloth, red edges, 5s. Red Basil and red edges, 7s. bd. Appendix only, paper cover, 1s.

This Book, which now contains the words of about 2000 Anthems, besides being admirably adapted for the use of Choirs and Congregations, for which purpose it was originally compiled, will be found most valuable to Organists, Choirmasters, and the Clergy as a BOOK OF REFERENCE FOR THE SELECTION OF ANTHEMS SUITABLE FOR SPECIAL DAYS, SEASONS, OR OCCASIONS, the Indexes baving been considerably enlarged. It also contains a list of Anthems suitable for Men's Voices, and Anthems with Latin words.

The newly incorporated Anthems (Nos 1590 to 1952) have been added to the former edition by means of an Appendix, which is published separately from the complete work. Consequently Choirs and Congregations which are still using the older edition are enabled to supplement their books, and make them complete, by purchasing the Appendix at the price of

One Shilling.

THE PARISH CHURCH ANTHEM BOOK

Crown 8vo, 250 pp., and 80 pp. of Indexes, cloth, red edges.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

• This Anthem Book is the outcome of a desire on the part of many parish churches for a COLLECTION OF WORDS of convenient size, permanent in character, representative as to selection, and moderate in price. It contains the Words of

printed in extenso; and many more are incorporated by means of reference letters. The Selection is prepared alphabetically, according to the names of the chief composers, and is so arranged that various settings by other composers of the same words, or of portions of them, may be used.

Messrs. Novello's collection of "Words of Anthems" has been used as a basis in the compilation of this work, but many anthems have been added, both ancient and modern, which have not been previously published in a Standard Form.

Full Score and Band Parts of both the above works may be had on hire.

THE TIMES, JUNE 25, 1908.

Mr. Friedländer's music has the merit of being straightforward.

"The Return to Zion" is a cantata for tenor, baritone and chorus.

The best number is the first, which contains some good choral writing.

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH, JUNE 24, 1908.

"The Return to Zion." The work has good points; the music is straightforward and at times expressive, as, for instance, in the first convis. Then there is a neat "Babylonian" march, with traces of Eastern rhythm and colouring A fugue, "But we will bless the Lord," is based on a vigorous subject, and the composer has wisely sociided under learnt. avoided undue length.

THE MUSICAL NEWS, JULY 4, 1908.

Mr. Friedländer writes with conciseness and incisively, so that his music is never wearisome. His themes are well devised, and the whole work gives ample evidence of musicianly aptitude. The fugue is striking evidence of this. Another number which was good to listen to was the "Babylonian" march, in which a successful attempt at local colour has been made.

THE MANCHESTER GUARDIAN, JUNE 24, 1908.

THE MANCHESTER GUARDIAN, JUNE 24, 1908.

A concert on an unusually ambitious scale was given at Queen's Hall last evening by Mr. Arthur Friedländer, an Associate of the Royal College of Music. He occupies an esteemed position as teacher and choirmaster. Mr. Friedländer's music is masculine and straightforward melodious, and smoothly and effectively written for chorus. The fugal chorus proved the most effective number, and the tenor solos, which were admirably sung by Mr. Ben Davies, made a considerable effect. The second work, a setting of Swinburne's "Ode to Music," gave the composer freer scope for picturesqueness and effect. In this the soprano solos, which are melodious and well-written for the voice, were beautifully sung by Madame Donalda. Mr. Friedländer was enthusiastically recalled several times after each of his works.

STAFF EDITION. THIRTY-SIXTH TO FORTIETH THOUSAND.

OPINIONS OF THE LONDON AND PROVINCIAL PRESS

A. R. GAUL'S CANTATA OAN OF

PRODUCED WITH GREAT SUCCESS BY THE BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

"An advance on the earlier work, 'The Holy City.' . . . The choruses are written with much knowledge of effect, and an 'Ave Maria' and the final chorus of the 'Spirit Voices' may be named as really charming.

LONDON FIGARO.

"Bound to be widely taken up, doubtless to attain which end the composer has employed but three soloists, and has given a more than usually large degree of importance to the choral work. . . . The 'Ave Maria' is singularly beautiful."

DAILY NEWS.
"Obviously written with a special view to the requirements of choral societies, and likely to become highly popular."

REFEREE

"Calculated to delight performers and listeners, being full of melody and taking effects."

WESTERN TIMES.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"

THE SHIELDS DAILY NEWS.

"One of the most delightful concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description, and will doubtless soon be a favourite with choral societies."

LEAMINGTON SPA COURIER.

"St. Paul's Choral Society brought their season to a close with a performance in the Town Hall of 'Joan of Arc.' The cantata, both in verse and music, is essentially fascinating and contains all the elements necessary to make it one of the standard works for performance by musical societies, the choral writing and orchestration being simply charmine."

TEWKESBURY REGISTER.

"The Conductor of the Philharmonic Society is to be congratulated on his selection of a Cantata possessing such attractive music as that which goes to make 'Joan of Arc' what it undoubtedly is—viz., the best work I remember having heard in Tewkesbury."

NORWICH DAILY PRESS.

"By the invitation of the Head Mistress of the High School, a large company assembled to hear a performance of 'Joan of Arc.' There is probably no living English composer who has obtained more popularity with provincial choral societies than Mr. A. R. Gaul. His sacred cantata, 'The Holy City,' is more extensively known than any other modern English composition of a similar character, and 'Joan of Arc' has already been successfully performed in London and many of the largest provincial towns. Mr. Gaul's writing is characterised by the most perfectly neat workmanship and spontaneity, combined with a neverfailing resource of melodic invention."

CRYSTAL PALACE REPORTER.

"The music throughout is of a very high order, and full of beauty and interest, so much so that it is hardly possible to single out any numbers for special praise. The various movements are widely contrasted in style, in some considerable dramatic power being manifest, but all overflow with melody, and there is a happy absence of the restlessness of tonality which disfigures so many modern works. The vocal parts, whether for soli or chorus, are written within the range of average vocalists, and are therefore grateful alike to the singers and hearers. The cantata is a credit to English art, . . . one of the most interesting works yet given by the Anerley Society."

SHEFFIELD INDEPENDENT.

"Will further enhance the reputation of the composer of 'The Holy City,' as a writer of bright, melodious, attractive, and musicianly Cantatas."

STRATFORD-UPON-AVON HERALD.

"In 'Joan of Arc,' particularly in the latter part, there are some exquisite passages—some charming descriptive pieces. The lovely 'Hark! thy spirit voices call,' carried one away in the spirit into veritable realms of dreamland, and the chorus, 'Fret not thyself to-day,' is picturesquely beautiful, graceful, and effective."

THE WESTERN NEWS.

"Few cantatas are as rich in chaste melodies, charming choruses, and exquisite orchestration as Alfred R. Gaul's 'Joan of Arc,' performed for the first time in Plymouth by the Vocal Association in the Guildhall last evening.

THE WESTERN DAILY MERCURY.

"Proved an unqualified success. . . the bulk of the Cantata is allotted to the chorus. In fact, the choir of this Association has seldom had such a good opportunity for giving their sterling worth a good display." good display.'

LEEDS MERCURY.

"Drew forth enthusiastic plaudits. . . . Of the Cantata, as interpreted last evening (in the Town Hall, Leeds, with a band and chorus of 250 performers), it is impossible to speak in terms of anything but praise. Solos and choruses alike are full of melody, while the orchestration is descriptive to a degree. For each of the principal vocalists there is one song that singles itself out, and each received an encore."

HERTS AND CAMBRIDGE REPORTER.

"The theme is one of the most romantic in the pages of history. In the earlier and poetic passages there is something of the charm of Sir Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen.' The last chorus is set to music which would be not unworthy of the great masters."

LIVERPOOL COURIER.

"Must enhance the high reputation of its composer."

HUDDERSFIELD EXAMINER.
"The inspiration of a highly-refined musician. . . . The Cantata is even a more masterly and beautiful work than 'The Holy City.'"

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE DAILY CHRONICLE.
"No more charming Cantata than 'Joan of Arc' could have been nosen. It abounds in delicious music. There is not a tedious note chosen. in it."

BRADFORD OBSERVER.
"Gives the listener a vivid and realistic impression, its attractiveness being continuous instead of spasmodic."

BIRMINGHAM DAILY TIMES.

"It would not be surprising if it attained to even the almost phenomenal popularity of 'The Holy City'; contains a similar wealth of melody and effective part-writing."

BIRMINGHAM DAILY GAZETTE.

"Reading the score convinces us that it is our townsman's greatest production. . . . Could have been originated by none but a born melodist.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY POST.
"A distinct advance upon Mr. Gaul's previous work in cantata form.
. A constant flow of exquisite melodies and effective choral writing."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

"A thoroughly melodious work, and should find favour with choral societies. It is not difficult to sing, and contains sufficient variety to keep up the interest to the end."

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful-to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of

"Almost every branch of octave-playing is represented in these tuneful studies."—Church Bells.

"These studies are very melodious, and will make the irksome study of octaves quite interesting to the hard-working student.—Church Family

"Fitted for advanced students. For wrist work, No. 2 is excellent and No. 6 is good enough for a concert piece. In all there is pretty equal work for both hand.."—Birmingham Daily Post.
"Six excellent octave studies (legato and staccato)."—Sheffield Daily Telegraph.

"Can safely be recommended to players who possess the laudable ambition of keeping up their technique."—Western Daily Press.

STUDIES PROGRESSI

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

EDITED, ARRANGED IN GROUPS, AND THE FINGERING REVISED AND SUPPLEMENTED

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

This Collection of Studies is intended to illustrate the various elements of a complete course of pianoforte technique, and to provide students with the means of attacking and overcoming the different special difficulties which have to be encountered. With this view, the Studies have been arranged in groups, those in each group being placed in progressive order, and having reference to some one particular difficulty. The greater part of the studies themselves have been selected from the standard works of the most eminent Study-writers, and with these are included numerous others, which, though of equally great practical utility, have hitherto been less generally accessible.

SELECTED PIANOFORTE STUDIES

PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

IN TWO SETS (EIGHT BOOKS), PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH BOOK.

THE present collection of studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most beneficial.

The Studies are grouped in two Sets, and are so arranged that the different Books in which they are contained may be taken in consecutive order, but pupils who are already further advanced than the elementary stage represented by Set I. may commence at once with Set II., which will be found to be complete in itself, and to illustrate all the essential elements of technique.

Where additional studies are desired, or studies on certain subjects which are not touched upon in this series, the larger collection, published under the title of "Progressive Studies" (from which the present examples have been selected), is of course available.

These Pianoforte Studies have been highly praised by M. Viadimir de Pachmann, who has expressed his intention of playing some of them during his Recital Tour in the United States. His testimonial is published with the Work, which consists of Twelve Numbers, specially designed to develop power and skill in the fourth and fifth fingers. The importance of trying to equalize these weaker fingers with the stronger ones is unquestionable, as defective execution is more often traceable to this inequality of the fingers than to any other cause.

A Modern School for the Violin

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" will consist of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.-STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on.

PIECES.

In completion of the scheme of "A Modern School" a large number of Pieces will be published, in a form designed to fulfil the requirements of Violin Teachers and Students. In each number the Violin part will be furnished with complete Fingerings and Bowings, besides remarks as to the methods of rendering, &c.

Competition Sestival Record

UNDER this head it is proposed to deal with festivals of the competitive type, and generally to serve the interests of the competitive festival movement which has now become an important factor in the musical development of the nation. We hope to be of service to the promoters of festivals in providing expert advice as to the best means of overcoming the numerous difficulties that arise in connection with the inception and carrying out of schemes. Communications are invited from secretaries and others who may desire to discuss points of general interest, and we shall be glad to receive printed reports of festival proceedings.

FESTIVALS.

ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

THE fourth annual conference of this Association was held on July 9, 1908, in the King's Room, at Messrs. Broadwoods, Conduit Street.

Miss WAREFIELD took the chair at the morning business meeting. The minutes of the third annual Conference were confirmed.

Dr. W. G. McNaught then read the Committee's report, which was as follows:

REPORT FOR THE YEAR ENDING JULY, 1908.

At the Committee meetings held during the year, the chief business discussed has been the formation of the proposed Advisory Council and the plans for the annual Conference.

The first Council meeting was held yesterday (July 8). The resolutions passed and suggestions made will be brought before you. Subscriptions have been received from 161 members. This number represents merely those from whom it has been found possible to obtain the subscription which entitles to formal membership. The Committee are glad to record the continued expansion of the movement. New festivals have been successfully started at Ashbourne in Derbyshire, Bourne in Lincolnshire, and at the People's Palace in East London. All three of these schemes owe their origin and inspiration to ladies, as do most of the festivals held in the country. At Ashbourne, Lady Duncombe, of Calwick Abbey, and those associated with her, greatly stirred the district. At Bourne, Lady Ancaster was the originator; much interest was aroused, and two days were occupied in hearing the competitors. The new festival in East London was fostered with extraordinary zeal and tact by Miss Edith Barran. The response was enthusiastic, and culminated in a very successful concert given by the choirs under Sir Walter Parratt.

It has sometimes been said that the competition festival movement is not likely to be as useful in large towns as it has been found to be in countryside places. But experience is showing that in the large, busy towns the movement is exceedingly successful in encouraging and creating musical organization, and in affording an appreciative and attractive arena for the display of the most efficient choirs.

In this connection it is worthy of note that the Metropolis and suburbs are now being provided with competition festival centres on a comprehensive scale.

A new festival at Aberdeen will begin its operations next Spring, and it promises, under the care of Professor Sandford Terry, to be an important event. In Ireland, Belfast is discussing plans for expanding the small scheme worked recently by the Irish Temperance League,

THE ASSOCIATION OF MUSICAL COMPETITION | and Coleraine has formed a committee in order to hold a festival in the Spring of 1909.

The Committee believe it will be interesting to members to know that the Royal National Eisteddfod will be held in London next Summer, commencing on June 15. These competitions will be upon a very comprehensive scale, and entries are invited from all the four nations. The opportunity thus presented of bringing the results of the young English movement into touch with the older Welsh institution is unique, and it may be hoped that choirs connected with our festivals will be worthily represented.

It is evident from many Press notices and from inquiries received that the existence of the Association has been the means of drawing considerable attention to the utility of the competition festival idea, both at home and abroad. It is doubtful whether some of the recently-established festivals would have come into being at all if the Association had not existed.

The report was adopted, and the following officers and committee were elected: President, Her Grace the Duchess of Norfolk. Committee: Lady Mary Forbes-Trefusis, Mr. W. H. Leslie, Miss Mary Egerton, Mrs. Commeline, Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland; and hon. secretaries, Miss Wakefield and Dr. W. G. McNaught.

The Hon. Norah Dawnay presented the report of the certificate sub-committee, and stated that matters had been progressing satisfactorily. Five places had interchanged this year, and many more would have done so had it not been for the fact that it was difficult to get printing done at prices which the various societies could afford, where only a few certificates were required.

After some discussion as to how the various existing blocks could be utilised, the report was received, and a vote of thanks to Miss Dawnay was passed.

The resolutions arrived at by the Council were then submitted. The following were the chief recommenda-

That the subscription for membership of the Association be 2s. 6d. per annum, and that only members should vote at Association Conferences.

That a Council be formed, composed of any member or members of the Executive Committees of affiliated Competition Festivals nominated by the local committee. This Council to meet once a year; the subscription for affiliation be 10s. er annum, and this subscription to entitle delegates to membership of the Association.

That each centre should forward to the secretary annually an annotated list of the music per-formed, adding a statement of the number of second-hand copies for sale, and the price proposed for the same.

That a list of names of adjudicators with their addresses, and with a statement of the centres they have visited, be given annually by the secretary.

That a classified list of music, suitable for the use of competition festivals, be compiled and made available for use, the list to contain pieces already performed and others that are recommended.

That the Association should petition the Board of Education to appoint special music inspectors in various districts of the country.

These resolutions were then considered, and, with some modifications, were carried. It was decided that three delegates from each affiliated centre would be regarded as members of the Association.

A committee was appointed to consider the proposed memorial to the Board of Education.

Lady WINEFRIDE CAREY-ELWES explained that the idea was that an appeal should be made rather to the local Education Committees than to the Board of Education.

Mr. W. H. LESLIE submitted the financial statement. which showed that the total income was £18 17s. 3d. There was a balance in hand of £4 10s., while there were liabilities to the extent of about £10. In order to make the work of the Association really effective there ought to be a guarantee fund of at least £50. [This amount was soon guaranteed in the room.]

The Countess of ANCASTER then took the chair.

A telegram from Lady Salisbury was read, stating that she much regretted being unable to fulfil her promise to take the chair, as she was to accompany the Queen on her visit to Bristol that day.

Lady Ancaster said she felt she was placed in a position which could be much more adequately filled by many other ladies present. It was a splendid movement in which they were concerned, and she was glad of the opportunity to learn more about it.

Mr. Fuller Maitland reported on the choral work which had won the prize offered last year. The conditions were that it should not take more than half-an-hour, and be of moderate difficulty, and that the accompaniment should be real pianoforte music. The judges found The judges found that one work suited the conditions much better than any of the others, and had no hesitation in awarding the prize to Mr. Luard-Selby, for his setting of "The Fakenham Ghost," by Robert Blomfield.

Lady Ancaster presented the prize to Mr. Bertram

Luard-Selby.

Dr. Sinclair then read the following paper on:

THE ENCOURAGEMENT OF AMATEUR ORCHESTRAL PLAYING.

There is no doubt that the standard of choral singing in this country has gone up very much during the last few years, and that this is, in many districts, chiefly due to our choral unions and competitive festivals, but we rarely find an orchestral society worth listening to in a country town. A generation ago nearly every village had its small band of instrumentalists, who accompanied the services in the church and on other occasions did The general use of the church organ has been the death of these little bands, and instead we now frequently find the brass band. The lack of a properly organized band cripples choral societies in the choice of music, and in many other ways.

festival, in addition to having Could not every competitions for solo string instruments, have unison classes for violins, and, when possible, for violas and violoncellos? These classes are the first real step towards orchestral playing. At a festival where I was lately adjudicating, I heard one of Bach's Gavottes played by a school of small boys. Violin classes are increasing rapidly in our elementary schools, as was illustrated at the Alexandra Palace last month, when fourteen hundred boy and girl violinists played together under the auspices of the National Union of School Orchestras. As a very important step towards the formation of orchestras, I suggest that classes for string orchestras, with or without pianoforte, should become more general. Besides the many good compositions for string orchestra only, there are now published a number of classics, well arranged for strings and pianoforte, the latter taking the place of the wind instruments. Classes should be conducted so as to be accustomed to follow a beat.

The Hereford Society, which I conduct, started with town members only, but it was soon found desirable to form a country section. There is now a membership of seventy to eighty performers. The town members meet for practice one night weekly, and the country members one afternoon every three weeks. The full society meets together for rehearsal just before the concerts.

We do all we can to make our members realise that the Society is really an educational institution. In the first place, only music which can be of educational value is put before the members for practice. At the practices the works are very minutely analysed and the scoring explained, so as to teach the members to be not merely one-line players. All difficult passages are taught separately, and at first very slowly, so that members get to realise the importance of every individual note they have to play. Much is also done by slow practice, at first, to teach a proper sense of rhythm.

I make a special point of teaching choir boys to play the drums and other percussion instruments. Some of these boys drum really well, and their performance at the practices does much to infuse a strong sense of rhythm into the other players. This is not allowed to interfere with delicacy and soft playing. The conductor of an orchestral society must, of course, insist on getting real piano and delicate playing when required.

The Society buys all its music, and is forming a good library. We are thus not only able to mark our music freely with fingering, bowing, &c., which is very essential, but also to let the members keep their music at home for There are other reasons why the system of study. buying instead of hiring music is desirable.

Now that the competition festivals have met with so much success in their efforts to further and raise the standard of choral singing, it is to be hoped that by degrees a similar result will in time be obtained in instrumental playing.

I consider that this Association may be the chief factor towards the encouragement of orchestral playing in this country.

Miss Mary L. Egerton (York) next read the following paper on:

COMBINATION IN COMPETITIONS.

Some few months ago I was asked to write a light paper of a racy nature on "Combination in Competitions." Fancy anyone writing a light, racy paper on such a weighty matter as Choral Combinations! Was ever such a request?

I think most choral societies see only one side of their competitions. They strain after excellence of singing in each individual choir, for the sole purpose of getting the better of other choirs, and they entirely ignore the far finer result which can be obtained by massed choirs in certain choral works; also, it seems to me, they overlook the higher moral effect of such singing in the minds of all concerned. Competition is now in the air; we breathe, smell and taste it everywhere, and it is time we turned the attention of our choirs to that higher platform of song for which they are-many of them unconsciously—fitting themselves.

I should like to tell you what we have been doing in our part of Yorkshire. Ever since we started these competitions some ten years ago, we have worked on modest lines, but always at choral work, as apart from solo work, in our villages, trying to improve the singing and musical taste in and out of the churches and chapels, with, I may say, some success. The last two years we have tried the experiment of grouping villages together against others in a short cantata competition. thus giving greater scope to conductors. Instead of there being only one local person to conduct a combined choir, there are now three or four more or less efficient conductors. Another object of this grouping is to break up the village cliques, which are so strong in some places that the inhabitants of one village will not speak to those of another; and this boycotting has gone on for generations. If we do not take care, village competitions, pure and simple, will only still more accentuate this exclusiveness. The way of working these groups is this: The conductor goes round once (oftener if he or she can) to each village; then, where it is possible, a combined rehearsal takes place in a central village, ending in a combined tea. These teas have been a great success, and have warmed the feelings of the coldest neighbours in a very effective and pleasant way. I should add that it is not absolutely necessary to have a combined rehearsal, so long as the choirs are to have a combined rehearsal, so long as the choirs are familiar with the ways of their group conductor. The group which won at York this year had had no combined rehearsal. Now what has been the result of this combined choirs' competition? Each individual choir has, without doubt, done its level best for its respective group, and the effect produced was such that one judge, Dr. McNaught, said the tone was surprisingly good, and another judge, Dr. Walford Davies, told me that nothing had given him greater hopes for the competition movement than this combined singing of village choirs. singing of village choirs.

Next year we hope to have a still more ambitious theme. We propose to hold a Village Choral Festival in our glorious old Minster, when we shall take some straightforward works. We hope all our village choirs, large and small, will join in this great choral effort, and we should have a grand total of something like 800 voices. I do not suppose that at present these villages have an idea of the magnificent effect they will be able to produce, if they throw their heart into it, and I look forward to the result giving them fresh zest and spurring them on to still higher choral flights.

An Inter-County Festival.

One word more, on a yet further effort in combination which we tried at Doncaster last year for the first time. The same thing was also done at Grimsby some three or four years ago. For want of a better term, we have called this experiment an Inter-county Competition, a competition in which some four centres took part, not including Doncaster itself. From a competition point of view it was quite successful; almost too much so, in one way, for there was scarcely enough time allowed, the entries being unexpectedly numerous. The opportunity this competition offered of comparing the results of the work done in the various centres was extremely interesting. As a matter of fact, the choirs came out very evenly, some of those from the so-called unmusical parts of Yorkshire, Nottinghamshire and Lincolnshire being as good as the others, showing what practice can achieve when carried out on the right lines. I do not pretend to offer any advice on these choral combinations. Every centre works presumably on the lines best fitted to the wants of the local choirs. I only wish to suggest that it is well to bear in mind that combinational choral singing aims at higher objects than competition choral singing.

Dr. H. P. Allen (New College, Oxford, Conductor Bach Choir, &c.) also gave an address on the importance of combined music at competition festivals.

While recognizing that the competitive spirit was useful and stimulating in the early stages, he felt that it was important to insure that the movement led to greater results than competition. It was to the organization of combined effort that they must look for a permanent basis of success. After a few years of competitive activity, the whole aim of the resources should be to produce great works of Art. Friendly unity then took the place of rivalry, and the outlook was enlarged.

The difficulty of unifying a number of local units must be met by giving to combined rehearsals much more prominence than often was given at present. The concert at all festivals should be made the crowning music books to make notes in, so that at the end of the point of the work by the choirs, and all else should be subordinated to that end. He thought that those who papers set by myself. I found most of the papers had to choose the music for combined performance should be courageous. With judicious work and capable conductors choirs could learn anything reasonably difficult. Nothing produced more enthusiasm than the discovery by a choir that it was learning something difficult. He thought that all the tests for competition should be taken from the combined music.

It was a great mistake to have combined choirs so large that orchestras and halls were inadequate to accommodate them. The number of competitors should be limited to the known capacity of the arena. He had this year been at festivals where the choirs were twice as big as could possibly be contained in one room, and where the audience numbered about sixty and the choir 650. There was not the least doubt that the competition system had done and was doing an enormous educational work, but ultimately he hoped that they would be able to drop out the word "competition" and have all over the kingdom musical festivals of the highest kind.

In answer to questions, Dr. Allen said that, what really was wanted, was to get local conductors, ladies or gentlemen, to go through the work with them and assist them generally. This would give them heart to tackie their own choirs. If they could only give some real help to the small This would give them heart to tackle their own conductors, he was sure that was one of the principal things which would ensure success. People who said they had no ability to conduct—and perhaps had not could very soon get it. The real thing in conducting was enthusiasm; it was extraordinary what results could be achieved by people who had small musical talent.

Miss Warefield observed that at Kendal they had a meeting of the conductors before the year's work commenced, which had proved very valuable. The work was gone through by some competent player, and every conductor then knew how it should be studied.

Lady Winefride Cary-Elwes asked if anyone had ever tried a class for conductors? In her case it had not yet been done, because they could not find the person to give the lessons.

The CHAIRMAN said that Miss Wakefield's suggestion for a conductors' meeting, with someone to play the music in the first instance, was a suggestion which would entirely serve the purpose in view.

At the afternoon meeting, Lady MABEL HOWARD, President of the Carlisle Competition, took the chair.

The first paper read was by Mr. T. Tertius Noble (York Minster) on

THE TRAINING OF VILLAGE CHORAL SOCIETES.

Mr. Noble said:

I intend to give you some idea of what I did with two small village choral societies in my Ely days.

The material I had to deal with was raw in every sense of the word: in one of the villages the population was probably well under 2,000, and the other under 1,000; in one class I had about forty members, and in the other about thirty. Cambridgeshire has a reputation for being somewhat unmusical, and the voices are said to be thin and of poor quality; in fact, this is frequently said of many parts of Great Britain, but I am bold enough to Islands, and that, with proper training, good singing may be acquired anywhere. During the last few years, I have had many opportunities of hearing village choirs and choral societies, when acting as adjudicator at musical competitions, and I do not hesitate to say that I have heard great beauty of tone produced by choirs in the so-called unmusical spots of England; take, for example, Lincolnshire.

I took for granted that the class knew absolutely nothing of theory, or voice production, so I began at the very beginning. I made free use of the blackboard, and began by explaining the meaning of the stave, clefs, key-signatures, time-signatures, value of notes, rests, and so forth. On these points I spoke at length, and gave many illustrations. I usually devoted about an hour to theory alone; all members of the class had small MS.

After dealing with theory, I generally gave the class three-quarters of an hour on voice-production, and very easy sight-reading tests. The first step is "the art of breathing." I think one of the best ways to acquire good, steady breathing is to begin by giving counting exercises. Get your class to take a breath very slowly through the nostrils, and exhale slowly while counting, say, up to twelve. Little by little increase the dose, till you can get your class to count very slowly at least twenty-five beats (M. 60) in one breath. After this, attention should be given to producing good tone. This, more often than not, is a difficult task, and requires much patience. To my mind the best plan is to begin by singing very softly on the easy vowel sounds such as oo and ah, sustaining these sounds for about four slow beats with a steady, flowing tone on the lower and middle registers. When these vowels have been mastered, and the tone is really pure and of good quality—in other words, well placed—we may pass on to the more difficult vowels, such as a, e, and ah. These require much practice, and much patience on the part of the teacher, and I often find it most difficult to get the tone well forward on these sounds, especially the e and a. This being the case, I take an easy vowel like oo and gradually work into e and a. By degrees the tone becomes fuller and rounder, and travels better; but until these difficulties are overcome, it is useless to attempt to teach part-songs, &c., with the words. Never attempt to sing words until all the vowel sounds and modifications of these sounds are conquered; much harm is often done by trying to sing words before the tone is properly placed.

In order to make the lesson interesting and agreeable, I wrote a series of short and easy melodious phrases on the blackboard. These were sung by the class in unison to all the vowel sounds in turn, and, by way of variation, I also wrote a scale in the major key, using a long pointer, and took simple intervals from the scale; and so, little by little, the members of my class were able almost faultlessly to sing any interval without hesitation. Later on I added the chromatic notes, and, after much work and plenty of encouragement and patience. I got some really good results in reading difficult intervals.

After about six lectures the tone of the class improved by leaps and bounds, so that I was able to give simple part-songs and madrigals for study, but in every case they learned the notes without the words, singing them through quite softly on all the vowel sounds in turn, taking ah last of all; for I consider this to be the most difficult of all our sounds to get a bright, healthy tone on. I was only talking the other day to an eminent teacher of singing, and he assured me that it sometimes took him six months to get the right quality of tone out of a pupil on ah.

When I found the tone and quality to be good after vocalizing the part-songs, I then worked carefully at the words, insisting on the great importance of consonant attack, and release of the same. By this I mean the great importance of pronouncing the first and final consonants with great rapidity of either tongue, lip or jaw movement, the effect of a slow movement of jaw would be to give a blurred and slovenly sound to the

It may interest you to hear what I do with small boys, mostly from our elementary schools in York, of seven and eight years of age, who come to be tested for my choir. As a rule, for a single vacancy, I have as many as fifty or sixty boys, varying in age from seven to ten. The first step I take is to examine the inside of their mouths in order to find out if they have good, arched roofs, healthy throats, and small tongues. I never choose a boy with a large, thick tongue. The next step is to sing a scale. Generally about a dozen of the boys are unable to hit any note at all; these I send away at once as being useless. As a rule about 35 per cent. of the boys have fair voices, but only about 10 per cent, really first-rate ears, and these are the boys who are finally selected. The ear-test I set is a somewhat searching one. First of all, I give exceedingly well done, and I should say at least 60 per | this test without hesitation; then I sound two notes, and ask for the lower one to be sung; then three notes, and the candidate has to sing the middle one; then a chord of four notes, usually an unpleasant discord, and I expect the two middle notes to be sung alternately, and very often little fellows of seven and eight are able to go through this severe test with the greatest ease. I often find boys with a sense for absolute pitch, and I encourage them to cultivate this splendid gift.

I return to my village folk. After two seasons' lectures and careful training of the voices, it was thought wise to give two concerts in order the show the results of our These were most satisfactory. labours. At one of the concerts a small cantata was performed, and at the other unaccompanied part-songs and madrigals, the music chosen being of the first order. The tone produced by both choruses was really wonderfully good, considering how coarse and hard it was during the first few lessons.

I think it very helpful to add expression marks, especially in music where very little has been done by the composer. Much of the music sung by my Minster choir is marked most carefully, and I find by adopting this plan I am able to get a great unity of expression and varied colouring. I even go to the trouble of marking nearly all the orchestral parts used by my symphony orchestra, and by so doing I find we get far better results, especially in the works of the old masters.

My final remarks must be on the great and important factor, enthusiasm. Enthusiasm backed up by a sound knowledge of one's subject will work wonders, and without it a teacher is of little use in any work which he or she may undertake.

Miss CECILIA HILL, secretary of the Herts and North Middlesex festival, read the following paper on:

THE COMPETITION FESTIVAL MOVEMENT IN LONDON.

Large bodies move slowly, and London comes late into the field of competitive festival activity. With the noble exception of Stratford, London has only recently to any large or organized extent, lent its enormous facilities and advantages to this cause. A London competition festival, certainly at first thought, appears to offer no charm, and does not appeal to the poetic imagination. Country villages sending their church choirs, and school children driving in hay wagons through green lanes, to sing in a tent or a shed, or under the trees in a field, present a more attractive picture than any we can conjure up in Edgware Road, or Mile End Road, or the Old Kent Road. But how incomparably important is the influence, both musical and moral, which a London competition festival might exert! Surely if it be necessary to raise the standard of public taste (I take this as the primary result we aim at in our festivals) the commercial City of London (for London is commercial through and through. East End, West End, from end to end) is in crying need of competition festivals. Musical comedies, music halls, ballad concerts, fashionable audiences, all do their best to degrade public taste. I am told, for instance, that the reason why the music hall has such an enormous hold on the masses is partly because there is no other institution in which the hearers can feel one with the singer, the chorus of a music hall song being the expression of such unity. (In all local music the audience, I am told, joins in the chorus.) Now, if London is eventually to become one of the capitals of the realm of music, to rival let us say Berlin, we must start with these people who pay threepence for their seats and join in the chorus, we must give them more choruses to join in, we must begin at the earth and work upwards. Let us start festivals; for choral societies spring up like flowers about the path of competition festivals, and we want hundreds and hundreds of choral societies for men, for women, for mixed voices, for factory girls, for office boys, for cooks, waiters, nurserymaids and policemen, we must make all London sing! That is what I mean by beginning with each candidate a series of notes played rapidly on the the masses, and these are the possibilities of a London pianoforte. If the boy possesses a good ear he will sing competition festival.

LOCAL FEELING.

Now in the country festivals, one of the chief factors on which we rely for success is the enormous strength of local feeling, and the joys and griefs of the choirs are fully shared by the audience. But local feeling of this sort practically does not exist in London. The audience would, I imagine, be quite indifferent if Chelsea were to beat Mayfair, or Notting Hill to beat them both. London is at present too vast and unorganized to allow of communal intercourse. There has, I believe, never been anywhere a strong revival or a new movement in art, or anything else, which did not start from a local centre. Art may end upon a national basis, but must start on a local one. As Professor Geddes says, let us go back to our boroughs, let us start from the village or perhaps the parish pump. A competition festival in every important borough of London would surely develop local resources and local pride.

Now for another way in which London festivals might help London. All lovers of music want a permanent opera in London. If at the competition festivals special classes were introduced for the study of opera, the airs, quartets, choruses, and so on, hundreds of people would be induced to know and love the operas, and the demand for a permanent opera would acquire an impatient and imperative sincerity which could not be trifled with Further, London competition festivals would change and improve the language of London. It is something gained if cockney children can sing one song in comparatively pure English. At our recent inaugural festival at the People's Palace I was intensely struck with the charming accent of children when singing, who, in ordinary speech, spoke such cockney as to be almost unintelligible; this was of course the result of very careful training. In the adult choirs the cockney accent was more noticeable. So a London competitive festival could be a school for English speech.

Then let me point to, perhaps, a less attractive argument, the ease with which a London festival can be started. I have started festivals in the country and in the town. There is absolutely no credit in being jolly over starting a London festival. To begin with, there is an alertness in the London mind which welcomes novelty, and meets one half-way. Then, there are numberless existing organizations that can be made use of—clubs, societies, commercial firms, all willing to include musical competitions in their work. There are hundreds of workers ready to hand, experienced in dealing with large numbers of people, trained in parish work, active and self-sacrificing. Then again it is much easier to raise money for subscriptions in London than in the country. It is comparatively easy to get an audience. It is easy to secure good adjudicators. There are good and convenient halls everywhere. One of the chief practical difficulties in the organization of a country festival is that of travelling, arrangements of special trains, &c. This trouble is non-existent in a London competition. All the competitors can walk to the hall. Then, one does not have to cater; competitors can either go home to tea, or secure tea and buns just round the corner.

It may be a heresy, but it is my conviction that a competition festival started in London, and hoping to achieve any serious success and form a prominent feature in the life of London citizens, must be designed on a large scale. The organization must be large, comprehensive in its outlines, with a large area and large number of workers interested, a large number of competitors, and even a large expenditure. It seems to me there would otherwise be danger that in the enormous number of societies, institutions and educational efforts in London, a competition festival on a small scale would be engulfed in London's terrific stream and achieve little real result. I am open to correction, but it certainly seems to me that those festivals started in a small and timid way, remain small. Fortune in this case, I have found, is always with the brave. Let us, however, now see how London so far is provided for.

AREAS OF LONDON FESTIVAL.

The East beyond Whitechapel, and the district comprising Essex, have been magnificently catered for, during should have an Imperial festival, the Colonies would the past twenty-six years, by the Stratford Festival, an admirable effort which owes its existence and success to the initiative of Mr. and Mrs. Curwen, and the untiring energy and perseverance of Mr. Graham. I am not here to give details as to the organization of existing festivals, and Stratford is too well-known to require any advertisement. Working geographically round London, and not in order of the date of their formation, I take the festival recently established at the People's Palace. Here is an area reaching to Temple Bar on the south and Hackney on the north, joining the area of the Stratford Festival on the east. These two festivals provide for competition in all forms of choral and concerted music (the People's Palace omits, however, the competitions for solos which are such a conspicuous feature of the older institution). Coming up to Hackney on the East, and as far South as Pentonville Road, and going far North through all the northern suburbs of London right away into Hertfordshire and North Middlesex, comes the festival held at the Alexandra Palace. Working round in our survey to the West of London, there might have been a distressing gap in the circle. To my great joy, however, I find that this district is also to be provided for. The admirable choral and orchestral competition of Kensington is extending its area, hitherto somewhat limited, and is in the future to include the London boroughs as far North as St. Pancras and Marylebone and as far West as Paddington. [It was and Marylebone and as far west as randington. It was explained afterwards that Ealing, Uxbridge and other places are included in this scheme.] The South London Festival, held at Battersea, including all London South of the river, completes the circle. If I have not mentioned the competitions of the London Sunday School Choir, of the London Working Girls' Club, of the St. Cecilia singing competition, of the Crystal Palace Festival in connection with the Tonic Sol-fa Association, and the London Schools Musical and Dramatic Association, it is not that I wish to ignore those excellent, artistic and useful efforts, because these, it appears to me, are working on very definite lines, catering each for special requirements more than for a special area not exactly metropolitan, though each is doing admirable and useful work in spreading the love of music and increasing the excellence of its study in London. Now that you have a clear idea of the organizations that are already on foot, you will perhaps realize the largeness of the sum of human effort that is being expended in this particular direction in London. Each festival represents a stupendous amount of work, carefully organized committees, carefully chosen local secretaries, large public meetings, large sums of money, hundreds and hundreds of singers, armies of conductors, stewards and secretaries, ceaseless rehearsals, and, finally, endless trouble on the part of devoted organists and schoolmasters, generously and cheerfully given without the hope of the smallest material reward. I am not a pessimist; I believe that none of this tremendous sum of human effort has been wasted, but competition festivals on a large scale are too recent a development in London for us to be discouraged by any smallness of result or by any apathy. I cannot help feeling, however, that these metropolitan festivals might perhaps help London more effectually and more swiftly with greater co-operation between them, the committees and secretaries meeting at stated times to adjust small differences and devise large and united efforts. There has not been time, so far; charity begins at home. I have visions of a festival, not so far away, of a competition festival to be held in London called "the London Competition," where the first-prize choirs from Stratford, Alexandra Palace, People's Palace, Kensington, Battersea, will meet and contend for the final prize, to be presented by the King at Buckingham Palace. There (as a result entirely of the educative influence of the local borough competition festivals) the best choral singing in England will be heard; there the choir of Blackpool and the prize-choir of the National Eisteddfod will come to listen with wonder and envy to the singing of a choir from St. Pancras or the Bayswater Road.

send their best chairs to compete. We might then go on and have an international tournament of song in London; the French, the Germans, the Russians, the Swedes could meet in friendly rivalry. In case of difficulties arising, special arbitration court could be established at a special arbitration court could be established as.

The Hague. The ancient Greeks combined dramatic performances (including song and dance) with their annual games. England is the inheritor of the Greeks, and the home of athletic conquests; it would be an ideal return to a pure and healthy attitude if song and sport could be combined, and if in London an Olympiad could be held where cricket matches, contests in dramatic representations, swimming contests, and choral singing would form the programme. London, by that time, but not before, will require no competition festivals: London will possess a musical atmosphere; London will be the home and school of English composers whose influence will spread throughout the world; London will be the centre of active Art life; and London will possess its National Theatre and its National Opera House, and it will be the competition festivals of London that will have helped to bring about these magnificent results.

Mr. AITKEN CRAWSHAW (Hon. Sec. of the Upper Wharfedale Festival, held at Ilkley) read a paper which described minutely a scheme for the encouragement of sight-reading. The scheme is not a new or particular plan of teaching the subject, but an elaborately graded series of examinations of results and of awards. As the scheme was printed in full in the July number of the SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, it need not again be given here.

In reply to a question, " If the sight-reading tests are not to be compulsory, how are we to get the choirs to go in for them?" Mr. AITKIN CRAWSHAW said the obvious answer was that inducements are so great that the teachers and conductors who wish to gain distinction, would enter for them on those grounds. He believed there were a number of choirs and schools which were anxious to bring themselves up in this respect.

Dr. McNaught said that Mr. Crawshaw had boldly gone into details, which, though difficult to follow, were absolutely necessary if the scheme was to be made to work. His own fear was, that the scheme was too elaborate. School teachers had recently emancipated themselves from individual examination. But now they would be asked to renew such examination, and that was a change which some teachers would resist. Yet the fact that the feeling against individual examination was not universal was proved recently at the Crystal Palace, when 5,000 children were gathered from the East of London, every one of whom had passed an individual examination in sight-singing. The event was organized by the Tonic Sol-fa Association, which was the only body in this country that had the courage to say they would not have a singer in the choir unless he or she had passed this examination. He wished they could do this right through the competition festivals, but this was a counsel of perfection.

Lady Mabel Howard said she believed that in this question of sight-singing laid the great difficulty of the education committees. The teacher had often hard work to get any music at all in the schools. The importance of the matter had been impressed on the Education Committee in Cumberland. They had to approach the managers, for the teachers had little to do with the matter. She thought everyone should impress on the education committees the importance of allowing teachers to teach festival music. Permission had been obtained for this in Cumberland.

The Rev. A. S. Commeline said that he did not think there was any necessity to get leave for festival music to be practised. The choice of the music usually laid with the head teachers, and if they chose the festival music it could be practised in the ordinary school time. Not only so, but the music could be bought out of the allowance for school material. He urged all who had to do with these competitions to make tight single assembles with these competitions to make sight-singing compulsory for the schools. In the Bucks competition they had 1,600 children, all of whom went through a sight-singing test. They encouraged staff notation. As far as his own experience went-and they had all the bigger schools in the area in their festival this year—not a single school made any difficulty about the test. In fact, the performance of a very difficult cantata, worked at in school hours according to the time-table, showed that it was obvious all the schools had managed to grapple with this sight-singing, and as a consequence had been vastly improved in power.

Mr. T. H. WARNER urged that the point was to approach the education committees in order to get them to include sight-singing in the school curriculum. of the education committees in East London paid for the whole of the certificates granted to these children on behalf of the recent Crystal Palace Festival. They encouraged the festival in every possible way, and allowed rehearsals during school hours

The Rev. A. S. COMMELINE said that the three education committees in Berks, Bucks and Oxon supported the festival committees most warmly. They did not give them money, but they helped in the way of music, notices, &c., and gave other facilities. Personally he did not believe it was true that there was any real difficulty in getting hold of schools or teachers.

Miss WAREFIELD said it would be very nice if all county councils and education committees could see matters in this light.

Lt.-General ORDE (Morpeth) said he had no difficulty in getting hold of the Northumberland Education Committee; the real difficulty was to get hold of the children.

Miss Say Ashworth then read a paper on her work in connection with a Manchester (Ancoats) Girls' Club. The experience recounted proved to be exceedingly interesting to the audience. We shall give the paper in full in our next issue.

After votes of thanks to Lady Mabel Howard and Messrs. Broadwood, the proceedings terminated.

SUNDERLAND.

CHILDREN'S COMPETITION, June 24.

This event was open to choirs of children (35 to 50 voices) attending the Council Schools of Sunderland, Southwick and Fulwell. The scheme was under the direct patronage of the Mayor and members of the Council. There were five money prizes, ranging from 10s. 6d. up to f_2 2s., and there were besides gold medals and batons for conductors. Mr. J. E. Jeffries, organist of Newcastle Cathedral, adjudicated. There were fifteen entries. Each choir had to sing "A song of evening" (A. H. Ashworth), and an "own-choice" piece. The following is a list of entries, &c., and a statement of the chief results:

and, Barnes Boys' School (Mr. Edward Warriner). "The comrades' song of hope."

Colliery Boys' School (Mr. George Hedley).

"When evening's twilight."

Diamond Hall Boys' School (Mr. J. T. Hindmarch).

"The carnovale."

3rd

(tied) Redby Boys' School (Mr. Andrew Wilson). "Gentle swallow."

Hendon Boys' School (Mr. J. R. Johnson).
"The May bells and the flowers."

James Williams Street Boys' School (Mr. Martin Cartledge). "I know a bank."

Moor Boys' School (Mr. Arthur Hurdman).

" May day."
Simpson Street Boys' School (Mr. R. W. Rudd).
"The Carnovale."

St. Columba's School (Mr. J. D. Hall).

"The old green lane."
St. Joseph's Mixed School (Mr. James C. Stone). "O, blithe new-comer.

St. Mary's Boys' School (Miss Brien).
"Hark, the birds are calling."

St. Mary's Girls' School (Mrs. Curran).
"The gipsies' revel."
St. Patrick's Mixed School (Miss Doherty).

" Greeting."

Thomas Street Boys' School (Mr. Wm. Adamson). "Gentle swallow."

Valley Road Boys' School (Mr. J. E. Orr).
"Whispering winds."

Mr. Jeffries reported as follows: "I am pleased to state that I found an excellent style of singing displayed by nearly all the choirs which took part. The quality of tone produced was of the right kind, and great care had evidently been taken in the preparation of both the test-piece and also that chosen by each choir to show its capabilities. Much attention had been paid to phrasing and expression. The results reflect the greatest credit upon the teachers."

Mr. Laycock says that a conspicuous feature of the competition was that it showed throughout the utmost goodwill and cheerfulness, indicating that the choirs competed for the love of the music and a desire to improve, rather than from the mere wish to gain a prize.

SOUTHPORT. July 2, 3, 4.

This festival is managed with great spirit. It appeals to almost the same districts as those covered by the other Lancashire festivals. But as few of the choirs, in the North at least, are content to sing at only one competitive centre, there was this year, as in previous years, a considerable number of entries. The weather turned out to be so fine and hot that the audiences were not altogether satisfactory, the public somewhat naturally preferring out-door attractions.

The following were the entries and chief results:

JUNIOR CLASSES.

Local Challenge Shield Class. Tests: "Down in a green and shady bed" (Boundy) and "The River" (Challinor).

Blowick School (Mr. F. W. Clarke).

1st, Talbot Street Wesleyan School (Mr. W. T. Barnett). 3rd, Hesketh-with-Becconsall C. E. School (Mr. T. Wilson).

St. Paul's Mixed School (Mr. R. G. W. Davis).

2nd, Birkdale Council School (Mr. A. E. Parr).

Wennington Road School (Mr. W. Ward).

wennington Road School (Mr. W. Ward).

Open Challenge Shield Class. Tests: "Ger swallow" (Rogers) and "Slumber song" (Challinor).

St. Paul's Mixed School (Mr. R. G. W. Davis).

Birkdale Council School (Mr. A. E. Parr).

Blowick School (Mr. F. W. Clarke). " Gentle and, Talbot Street Wesleyan School (Mr. W. T. Barnett).

3rd, Ancoats Junior Choir (Miss S. Ashworth).

1st, Morecambe Central School (Mr. M. Stoddard).

Children's choirs (Band of Hope). Test: "Spring song" (Schuman). One entry: Churchtown Congressions (Mr. M. D.).

song (Schumann). One entry: Churchtown Congregational (Mr. T. Brookfield).

Girls' Friendly Societies, Challenge Shield Class.

Tests, (a) "The happy birds" (Rubinstein); (b) "The lamb" (Walford Davies).

Heywood Street Girls' Club, Ancoats (Miss Wood).

Emmanuel Girls' Friendly Society, Southport (Mr. W. Tattersall).

1st, Girls' Institute, Ancoats (Miss S. Ashworth).

Girls' Institute, St. Helens (Mr. H. Berry).

3rd, Girls' Institute, Salford (Miss S. Ashworth).

2nd, Morecambe Girls' Friendly Society (Miss Duff).

ACTION SONGS. Grimshaw Street School, Preston (Miss Seed). "Dear little shamrock.

Southport Sand-pipers (Miss Brockbank). "Wynken, Blynken, and Nod."

2nd, Talbot Street Wesleyan, Southport (Miss Coppack).
"Spider and the fly."

Lytham Congregational (Misses Lowe and Consterdine.) " Fairies."

Brunswick Sunday School, Bury (Miss Platt).

"Little gipsies."

1st, Grimshaw Street School, Preston (Miss Peake). "Come, lasses and lads."

3rd, Talbot Girls, Preston (Miss Turner). "When will the boats come home." St. Wilfred's School, Preston (Miss Lyon).
"Mr. Gollywog, good-night."

ADULT CLASSES. There were eight divisions in the adult solo-singing competition. The first-prize winners were: Mrs. Marie Whitaker and Miss Edith F. Gledhill (sopranos), Miss Nancy Howe and Miss Maud Sykes (contraltos), Mr. A. Greenwood and Mr. Wilfred Gaukrodger (tenors), Mr. Herbert Allen (baritone) and Mr. Wm. Halkyard (bass).

The chief results in the choral sections were as follows: Male-voice choirs (alto lead). Tests: "I arise from dreams of thee" (Challinor) and "Tally-ho!" (Lee Williams).

2nd, Lancaster (Mr. T. Wilkinson).
2nd, Lancaster (Mr. R. T. Grosse).
3rd, Todmorden (Mr. T. H. Lees).
Male-voice choirs (tenor lead). Tests: "There was an aged monarch " (Cornelius), " Happy light, happy day ' (Scharwenka) and " The phantom host" (Hegar).

ist, Habergham (Mr. E. Hitchon).
2nd, Southport (Mr. J. C. Clarke).
Female-voice choirs. Tests: "Evening" (Hegar) and "The mermaid" (Schumann).

1st, Southport (Mr. W. Tattersall).

2nd, Girls' Institute, Ancoats (Miss S. Ashworth).

3rd, Birkdale Lagues Choral sight-reading.

1st, Bradford (Mr. H. Ball).

2nd, Southport (Mr. W. Tattersall).

Mived-voice choirs. Tests: "Christ has arisen" all ve heathen" (Bach) and "Song of the dance" (Cornelius).

1st, Colne Valley (Mr. T. R. Pearson).

2nd, Southport (Mr. W. Tattersall).

3rd, Mossley (Mr. John Shaw).

The Bach cantata was generally well prepared and constituted a special feature of the festival. Mr. Granville Bantock, who was one of the adjudicators, expressed great satisfaction at the inclusion of such a work as a test-piece. The other adjudicators were Dr. H. Walford Davies, Dr. Challinor and Mr. C. E. Bryan.

NONCONFORMIST CHOIR UNION.

CRYSTAL PALACE, JULY 4.

Ten choirs competed in two sections. Mr. Arthur Fagge adjudicated.

Class A.—For choirs of not less than 26 and not more than 40 voices. Test-piece: "If ye then be risen with Christ" (I. Atkins), and piece of own selection. The following choirs competed:

Portsmouth Wesleyan Church Choir (Mr. C. Weedon). "Good-night, beloved" (Pinsuti). Waltham Abbey Wesleyan Church Choir (Mr. W. T. Thomson). "Awake, Æolian lyre"

(J. Danby). ist, Ebenezer United Methodist Church Choir, Barnsley (Mr. John E. Ward). "The river floweth strong, my love "(R. Rogers).

Class B.—For choirs of not less than 16 and not more than 25 voices. Test-piece: "Unto Thee, O God" (W. Wolstenholme), and piece of own selection. The following choirs competed:

Dartford Wesleyan Church Choir (Mr. Edwin Phillips). "On the banks of Allan Water." Marlowes Baptist Church Choir, Hemel Hempstead

(Mr. Alfred Goodman).

"The long day closes" (Sullivan).

"The shepherds' Sabbath day" (Hatton).

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE FÊTE.

CRYSTAL PALACE, July 11.

The competitions on this occasion were for solo singers and choirs. In the solo sections the entries were as follows: Soprano 16, contralto 12, tenor 11, bass 9. The tests and first-prize winners were:

Soprano: "A woodland madrigal" (in key D) (Batten).

1st, Miss Washburn (Portsmouth).

2nd, Miss Clatworthy (Barry).
Tenor: "O flower of all the world" (in key F) (Woodforde-Finden).

1st, Mr. Fisher (Southsea). 2nd, Mr. James (Aberavon).

Contralto: "Where corals lie" (in key D) (Elgar).

1st, Miss Price (Southsea). and, Miss Burns (Portsmouth).

Bass: "Droop not, young lover" (in key A minor) (Handel).

1st, C. F. Clay (Portsmouth). 2nd, W. Bennett (Portsea).

The first prizes were firs. and second 10s. 6d. Mr. A. W. Moss, of Reading, was the adjudicator.

In the juvenile choir class there were ten entries, the test-pieces being "Come away, elves" (Glover), and "While topers must keep drinking" (Anon.). Maximum marks 100.

First prize was secured by Lake Road, Portsmouth (Mr. W. T. Sayer), 97 marks.

Second prize by Surrey Chapel Band of Hope (Mr.

S. W. Sharvell), 95 marks.

Third prize by John Pounds Mission, Stepney (Mr. W. Grix), 89 marks.

Mr. H. Llewelyn (Mountain Ash) adjudicated. The prizes consisted of bannerettes, silver badges, certificates and music.

There were two adult choral sections. In that for small mixed choirs up to fifty voices there were six entries. The test-pieces were "Who is Sylvia" (Macfarren) and "My bonnie lass she smileth" (Morley).

Bristol secured first prize (Mr. F. Stone), 91 marks. Clarion, Portsmouth, second prize (Mr. S. Martin), Barry Temperance, third prize (Mr. P. Harvard), 85 marks.

In the class for choirs up to 100 singers there were three entries. The test-pieces were "Nymphs and shepherds" (Purcell) and "Martyrs of the arena"

(Laurent de Rillé).

The first prize was taken by Cardiff Blue Ribbon Choir (Mr. Jenkyn Morris), 94 marks.

Second prize, Aberavon, Port Talbot and Farbach Choir (Mr. G. T. Llewellyn), 87 marks.

Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor adjudicated in both the above classes.

THE TONIC SOL-FA ASSOCIATION. CRYSTAL PALACE, JUNE 27.

Four choirs contended for the Curwen silver challenge shield. A silver cup was given to the second in order, and another cup was given for the best sight-singing. There were no money prizes. Each choir had to sing "Æolian harp, I love thy dying strain" (Frederic James) and an own-choice piece. The following is a list of entries and selected pieces, &c.:

Eglinton Road Choral Society, Plumstead (Mr. P. Alderton), "O Light, whose beams" (S. Reay).

Borough of Greenwich Choral Society (Mr. C. Nixon),

"How sweet the calm" (G. A. Blackburn).

The Select Choir, Mile End (Mr. G. Day Winter),
"Lullaby of life" (H. Leslie).

Essendine Choir, Paddington (Mr. W. Kendall),

"Evening scene" (Elgar).

Eglington Road seemed to lack experience, but they displayed good drill and some delicate rhythm. Their conductor had a good conception of choral effects, but that the choir was not yet capable of fully responding.

The Greenwich Choir is a well-equipped and well-disciplined body of singers. The tonal attack was occasionally curved, and the expression lacked sincerity and moving power.

Mr. Winter's choir is large and well organized. straggling formation of the men's voices could hardly have promoted unity. The tone was resonant and of good quality, and there was finish and breadth in the style. Some of the rhythmic possibilities of the first piece and a good deal of its poetry were realized. The "Lullaby" was thoughtfully interpreted. It was a trifle slow, and the pitch gave way; but it was a time interesting, because it displayed musical sonority and expressive insight.

The Essendine Choir contains many excellent singers, but the balance sadly lacked tenors. In the first piece there was much to admire in the tenderness of the expression and the beauty of the tone. The tone-colour of this choir is remarkably consistent, but this quality seemed to be secured at the expense of complete vowel definition. The "Evening scene" was charmingly and picturesquely sung. Mr. Kendall has a fine conception of the piece. The low tints, although obscured by the distressing noises tolerated in and around the concert room, were beautifully realized, and throughout there was control notwithstanding the restraint. But the lack of tenors was fatal to complete realization of the piece.

The result was as follows:

1st, Mr. Winter's Choir, 141 marks (out of 160). 2nd, Essendine Choir, 139 marks.

Two pieces were submitted as sight-tests: "How calmly the evening" (Elgar), which was found far too easy, and "God sends the night" (Reginald Somerville). All the readings were good. The results were as follows:

Maximum, 80 marks—Eglington 71, Greenwich 76, Mr.

Winter's Choir 77, Essendine 74. Dr. McNaught adjudicated.

BERKS, BUCKS, AND OXON FESTIVAL. A VALUABLE APPRECIATION.

AT the meeting of the general committee, held on June 26, the following telegram was received: "Bucks County Education Committee desires to express appreciation of service rendered to the cause of musical education by means of the Competitive Musical Festival " (Signed, Secretary).

DATES OF COMPETITIONS WITH NAMES OF SECRETARIES, 1908.

of great natural beauty."—Daily Express.

"THE CRUSADERS.—Miss Mary Lund possesses a beautiful soprano voice of considerable strength and excellent range, which she has well under control. She very delightfully sang the lovely solo, 'They softly sleep,' and at once won the hearts of her hearers, who cheered and recalled her. Still better was her work with Mr. Lloyd Chandos, in the fine scene which constitutes the eighth number; and again encomiums, more emphatic, were showered upon her. . . Miss Mary Lund covered herself with glory by her vivacious and brilliant singing of the 'Jewel Song' from 'Faust,' and filled with hilarious delight the audience, who cheered and recalled her again and again until she consented to oblige once more. She offered 'Annie Laurie,' and sang it so charmingly as to make it intensely acceptable."—Bristol Times.

"BRIDE OF DUNKERRON.—Of the soloists, Miss Mary Lund was perfect. She has a voice, full, sweet, resonant and pure, with just a 'tear' in it which indicates the soul that guides it. The work allotted to this artist is very heavy and arduous, but she accomplished it not only with scrupulous regard for accuracy, but without a sign of flagging. Her duets with Mr. Henry Brearley were amongst the most thrilling numbers of the concert. . . . The second part of the programme was miscellaneous. Miss Lund had rapturous rounds of appreciation showered upon her, even to double encores."—Cornwall Gazette.

SPECIALLY ENGAGED FOR THE FIRST "TETRAZZINI" Tour, 1908.

ROBIN OVERLEIGH

(BASS-BARITONE).

SPECIALLY ENGAGED FOR THE FIRST "TETRAZZINI" Tour, 1908.

THE TIMES.

May 14, 1908.

Mr. Robin Overleigh, who gave a vocal recital yesterday in Bechstein Hall, has a baritone voice of charming quality, and he has evidently been well trained. . . . His old French songs were phrased and delivered with distinct musical ability; Caccini's "Amarilli" was a good example of sustained singing, and Carissimi's "Vittoria" was brilliantly sung. . . . Walford Davies's "This ae nighte" was made duly impressive, however, and "I love the jocund dance" was so skilfully sung that it had to be repeated. A couple of songs by A. H. Brewer, Blow's "Self-Banished," and well-known songs by Bennett, Arthur Somervell, and Parry were also given, and the singer made a distinct success.

THE STANDARD.

May 14, 1908.

Praise is due to Mr. Robin Overleigh for presenting such an unconventional programme at his recital in Bechstein Hall yesterday afternoon, and also for his ability in sustaining the interest of a large audience to the very end. He uses his well-trained baritone voice effectively and with a good method of production. The tone is even throughout its range, and of a musical quality, but his singing of Caccini's "Amarilli" and Carissimi's "Vittoria" was expressive, and his phrasing artistic. His rendering of Brahms's songs was his best effort, as they were given with the dignified interpretation they need, and moreover it proved that he will be invaluable in oratorio. He was successful in two new songs by Dr. Herbert Brewer, sung with considerable charm of voice and style.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

In view of considerable alterations in the requirements for the January A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Examinations, intending Candidates are advised to apply for the Regulations, which are now ready.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Sec.

Kensington Gore, S.W.

The Musical Times.

SEPTEMBER 1, 1908.

DR. H. A. HARDING.
HONORARY SECRETARY OF
THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

'No work begun in earnest, and followed up by quiet perseverance, can fail ultimately to command success.' This utterance of a great master of music is charged with untold potentialities. Its words of wisdom form a complement to those contained in Ecclesiastes ix., 10. The dictum is so wide in its application as to embrace all mankind, from the humblest worker to the greatest genius. So true and so full of encouragement are the above quoted words of Mendelssohn, that they should be stamped in letters of gold upon the minds of all those who wish to serve their generation wisely and well, and taste the sweets of success. And this specially applies to young musicians of the present day, who need to be reminded that little can be accomplished without strenuous work and earnestness of set purpose. Such strivings produce men of grit-men, and women too, who embrace every opportunity of acquiring knowledge in order to strengthen them for the battle of life and the furtherance of the art to which they devote their gifts and energies. One of the many musicians thus equipped forms the subject of this biographical sketch.

Harry Alfred Harding was born at Salisbury on July 25, 1855. He began his musical career as a pianist, and still retains the pleasant 'pianoforte touch' which he acquired in his youth. His first teacher was Mr. T. E. Spinney, who with his sons and daughters, held between them five or six different organ appointments in that city. recalling his boyhood period, Dr. Harding says: 'I used to practise the pianoforte many hours a day, in fact all the time that could be spared from my school work was spent in this way. From records which I have kept, I find that my daily practice often amounted to eight or nine hours, it being my ambition above all things to become a pianist. I never neglected a chance of playing accompaniments; indeed, I remember when I was about fourteen undertaking the sole accompaniment to a travelling pantomime company, which meant three continuous hours' pianoforte playing for several nights. This engagement I soon terminated. The constant companion and friend of my early days was C. W. Pearce (now Dr. Pearce), a Salisbury boy. I shall never forget how impressed I was by his skill at the organ, and by his early developed facility in contrapuntal writing. When, in after years, he heard of my going up for the College of Organists' examination, almost selftaught in regard to counterpoint, he very kindly gave me, by post, many hints which proved invaluable. To return to earlier times. I only

I was greatly handicapped by having to practise on a curious instrument erected in a private house. At that time radiating pedals were coming into vogue, and the owner of this organ was so taken with the idea, that he had his pedal-board made to radiate—but inwards! with the result that I had to practise the pedals with my toes turned in!

While in his teens, Dr. Harding became organist of the church of Fisherton-de-la-Mere, a tiny village about twelve miles from Salisbury. The organ there had only one manual and no pedal pipes, and the young organist had to walk two miles each way from Wylye station to Fisherton church. In the spring of 1873, aged seventeen, he was appointed organist and choirmaster of Sidmouth Parish Church, Devonshire, and his first real organ practice began at this period. This post he obtained through the influence of Lord Sidney Godolphin Osborne, the celebrated 'S. G. O.' letter-writer to The Times, who lived at Sidmouth. There, year after year, for sixteen years, he worked quietly on, diligently applying himself to his church and his studies, conducting the choral society, and so on. Dr. Harding has a firm belief in the value of embracing every opportunity for acquiring a knowledge of the diverse opinions of experts on particular subjects, as a means to thorough equipment. Not having had the advantage of the usual orthodox professional musical education, and feeling the urgent necessity of strengthening his theoretical knowledge, he used to take lessons from different teachers during holidays spent in various places—e.g., Dr. Abram, at Hastings; Dr. Haydn Keeton, at Peterborough; and, more especially, Dr. C. W. Corfe, at Oxford. In this connection Dr. Harding says: 'Young musicians in my early days had not the facilities for discovering what they may, or may not, do in examination work, that they have nowadays. remember Dr. Corfe used to worry me considerably. He would never allow the use of the chord in original harmony work. He said, "Handel never used this chord, and why should Harding?" He always crossed off the 4th of the chord. I used sometimes to take advantage of a journey to London to get an organ lesson from Mr. (now Dr.) Hoyte, who gave me much valuable advice and information; and for some years I went once a week to Exeter, to take organ lessons of Dr. D. J. Wood and, through his kindness, to play the organ at the afternoon service at Exeter Cathedral.' For some considerable time Dr. Harding conducted the Sidmouth Volunteer Brass Band, an experience which he found of great value, and by which he became acquainted with, and learned the capacities of, the different instruments.

in after years, he heard of my going up for the College of Organists' examination, almost self-taught in regard to counterpoint, he very kindly gave me, by post, many hints which proved invaluable. To return to earlier times. I only took up the organ in a mild sort of way, and not available, all the wind parts were represented by little keyed instruments of the harmonium type, called Orchestrinas, the invention of a clever reedvoicer named Evans, father of Madame Frickenhaus, the well-known pianist. Thus he interested a host of people in the standard orchestral works; and though the effect may at times have been curious, the results justified the means, and in practice were invaluable both to the players and to the conductor by way of making them acquainted with the masterpieces of Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, and Schubert. Dr. Harding says, with a twinkle in his eye, 'I had to select very patient ladies for the brass wind parts, because of the great number of silent bars'!

In 1875 he passed the examination for the Fellowship of the Royal College of Organists (then the College of Organists), and a few years later the Fellowship examination of Trinity College, London. In 1877, at the age of twenty-two, he obtained the degree of Bachelor of Music at Oxford. Of the 120 candidates who entered for the preliminary examination at that date, he was the only one who took the Doctorate in the shortest time permissible, in 1882. 'After having kept my Doctor's exercise for nine months,' 'Ouseley returned it with the Dr. Harding, commendation "Great credit." I was obliged to have the work—an oratorio on the subject of "St. Thomas"—performed in the Sheldonian Theatre at my own expense. It cost me £120, and yet it was not done on a lavish scale. Dr. Harford Lloyd kindly played the drums for me on that occasion.' To complete Dr. Harding's academic distinctions, he obtained the diploma (organ playing) of Licentiate of the Royal Academy of Music in 1895.

On April 11, 1883, Dr. Harding married Lucy, eldest daughter of the late Rev. Joseph Salvin, Rector of St. Mary's, Castle Gate, York, and in THE MUSICAL TIMES of July, in the same year, we read that the Sidmouth Choral Society presented him with a handsome recognition of his services as conductor, to mark the occasion.

After having spent sixteen happy years at Sidmouth—'where everything was delightful, but where the opportunities for musical work were necessarily limited,' Dr. Harding says: 'I was roused from my happy dream in Devonshire by a tempting offer to settle at Philadelphia, as organist of St. Clement's Church. At the last moment negotiations fell through, appointment immediately presented itself, namely, the organistship of All Saints' Church, Eastbourne. watering-place.

At Bedford, the town of his adoption, Dr. Harding leads the busy life of a 'chief musician.' The musical services at the historic parish church

'Not only are all the men voluntary singers,' Dr. Harding tells us, 'but they represent all grades of social life. They all simply love it, the church music, and our choir is a veritable brotherhood.' His excellent assistants at the organ, Mr. W. E. Ison and Mr. F. Long, are a great help to him. Every Sunday evening Dr. Harding gives a short organ recital on the fine Norman & Beard organ erected eight years ago. These recitals are attended by large congregations. Every three years a choral festival is held in St. Paul's Church, in which all the choirs in the Archdeaconry take part, Dr. Harding being the conductor. He is also organist to the Corporation of Bedford, an office which dates back to the (See p. 570 of the present issue.) year 1715. Dr. Harding is honorary secretary of the Eastern section of the Incorporated Society of Musicians.

Among his numerous other activities is the conductorship (since 1901) of the Bedford Musical Society. To this excellent organization he devotes two nights-one to the choir, the other to the orchestra—every week during the autumn and winter months, purely as a labour of love, receiving no honorarium for his services: all his evenings during the season are fully occupied with either church, school, choir, or orchestral rehearsals. is organist and music-master of Bedford Grammar School; he is also professor of music at the Bedford High School for Girls. His most distinguished pupil there was Miss Agnes Nicholls, the well-known soprano singer. Further reference to some of the local interests above mentioned will be found in the article 'A visit to Bedford,' on the opposite page.

In regard to compositions there can be placed to the credit of Dr. Harding a dramatic cantata for men's voices, 'Mucius Scævola,' composed for the Eglesfield Musical Society, Queen's College, Oxford, and produced by them, May 27, 1904; an arrangement of the work for mixed voices had been previously produced by the Musical Society, on February 9, 1904; Incidental music to 'Persephone' and to an Egyptian play, 'Rhodopis'; Morning Service in D; Evening Services (Magnificat and Nunc dimittis) in C and F; Communion Service in F; Oratorio 'S. Thomas' for soli, part-chorus, and full orchestra; but another | Psalm 116, for soli, eight-part chorus and orchestra; some songs, and pianoforte pieces.

Dr. Harding has been greatly in request as a lecturer on musical subjects; indeed, he has always more invitations to lecture than he can accept. His engagements have included University Extension Lectures. He is now preparing one to read before the Froebel Society on 'The training of 'This is a subject which children's voices.' interests me exceedingly,' he observes. 'With 800 boys at the Grammar School and 600 girls at the High School passing through my hands, I see much which goes to prove that voice-training in Secondary Preparatory Schools is practically non-existent. I examine the voices of all those who enter the two schools I have named, and I find that children who obtain scholarships from the Elementary Schools of the town are generally so-called Preparatory Schools.' From the years 1901 to 1903 he was one of the examiners for and its usefulness increasingly developed. musical degrees in the Victoria University,

The personality of a man: what a wonderful asset or otherwise that may be in the career of a practical musician. How many clever men-born too clever, perhaps—fail for the lack of those social along life's pathway towards the goal of success. Geniality, gentlemanlike - bearing, the respect of one's fellow men, and honesty of purpose -who can estimate the sum of them? And when these attributes which go so far to make personality are combined with good health, skilled musicianship, indomitable perseverance, 'and patient continuance in well-doing,' the award which awaits a man thus equipped for the battle of life is assured. Dr. Harding is one thus gifted in heart and mind. The esteem in which he and Mrs. Harding are held in Bedford was exemplified by the handsome presentation recently made to them—by the Mayor of Bedford, on behalf of the subscribers—on the occasion of their silver wedding, an event which was reported in the May issue of this journal; and it should be recalled that only four years ago, after the first performance of his cantata 'Mucius Scævola' by the Bedford Musical Society, he was presented by the members with a solid silver tea-service and It was a wellan album as a token of regard. merited testimony to his worth when, after the lamented death of Dr. F. Keenly alert to make the Royal College of Organists—of which he has been a Fellow for more than thirty yearsincreasingly useful, and to augment the value of the diplomas that are granted, Dr. Harding has been kind enough to furnish replies to the following

'In regard to this subject a complete and exhaustive choir training examination is provided by the Royal College of Organists, but at present it is only open to Fellows. Whether it would be wise or desirable to allow Associates to sit for this examination is a matter for consideration.'

There can be no doubt that Dr. Harding will use his influence in making the examinations of Royal College of Organists eminently practical, and that under his wise and genial better trained than those who come from the administration of the office which he holds, the prestige of the Institution will be fully maintained

A VISIT TO BEDFORD.

Bedford is one of those clean, compact, and attributes which smooth and hasten the journey pleasant towns which owe not a little of their attractiveness to a beautiful river. The delightful water-way of the Ouse, with the handsome promenade embankment on its north side, is, however, by no means the only feature of interest in the place. Antiquity, famous men, several fine parish churches, splendid and exceptional educational advantages, and a flourishing musical society are some of the things which combine to give distinction to the town, and make a visit to Bedford an enjoyable experience.

In regard to antiquity, it may suffice to hark back to A.D. 571, when a battle was fought between Cuthwolf, brother of Ceauline, King of the West Saxons, and the British army, at Bedicanford, or Bedican-fortha, the protected ford, the Saxon name of the place. During the reign of Ethelred, in 1010, Bedford was one of the places sacked and burned by the Danes as they traversed the valley of the Ouse. In Domesday, Bedford was never apportioned into hides (hidata), with the exception of one hide worth 100 shillings with which St. Paul's Church was endowed. Its old castle-said to have been built by Edward the Elder, son of King Alfred, but now demolishedis frequently mentioned in history. As early as the year 1166 Bedford received its first charter; this document, still preserved, has been followed by twelve other charters, the last bearing date 1666.

The two most distinguished men associated with the town are John Bunyan and John Howard. Although the author of 'The Pilgrim's Progress' was born (in 1628) at Elstow, a village to the 'Considering its importance in the equipment south of Bedford, he passed the greater part of his of a church organist, do you think more attention life in the town as a preacher and writer of religious books. He wrote his magnum opus, 'The Pilgrim's Progress,' during his imprisonment in a jail, formerly situated on old Bedford bridge, that has long ceased to exist, though misinformed or imaginative guides point out to American tourists the existing county jail—built in 1801, and 113 years after Bunyan's death—as the place of his incarceration! Dame Margaret, Sir William's second wife, is buried in St. Paul's Church, and it is therefore more than probable that Sir William was himself interred there also.

No wonder that people are attracted to Bedford Howard (1726? - 1790), well-known as 'The —it is only an hour's railway journey from London —if only for its great educational advantages! The present buildings are worthy of the objects of Lord Mayor Harpur's gift. Among distinguished 'old boys' were the late Colonel Fred Burnaby, of 'A Ride to Khiva and Lord fame, Brampton, better known as Mr. Justice Hawkins. At the High School for Girls (opened in 1882) there are 600 pupils. Both these splendidly educational equipped establishments contain an organ, and the musical part of the curriculum at both schools is in the good hands and under the wise direction of Dr. H. A. Reference to the church in Domesday has already been made. Up to the year 1528, St. Paul's was in some measure used as a collegiate church, under and served by chaplains appointed by the prior and convent of the B.V.M. and St. Paul, From a musical, no less than an antiquarian and Newenham, founded by Simon de Beauchamp, an old English town invariably prove attractive years ago. The building itself probably stands on the site of the collegiate church which existed It was rebuilt in the reign of in Saxon times. King John, but was pulled down in 1216 by Falkes de Breauté, a military adventurer of that time, in order to provide materials for rebuilding the castle! Ten years later, however, Henry III. gave some of the materials from the castle which he had dismantled for the rebuilding of the church. In the 15th century a clerestory was added, a finelycarved oak roof put throughout the building, the north transept removed, and other alterations made. In the reign of Henry VIII, the church became for a time the cathedral of a suffragan is the Minute: bishop.

During the first half of the 19th century the church was terribly disfigured in that both the chancel and lady chapel were separated from the main building by a wooden screen, and used as receptacles for lumber! The pulpit and altar were placed on the south side of the heavy-galleried building, so terribly debased had the taste for church architecture become. In 1866-67 the In 1866-67 the central tower and spire were rebuilt, the chancel and lady chapel opened out, and other needed improvements made. The building now consists of a chancel with a south aisle (the lady chapel), and a nave with north and south aisles, the total length being 147 feet. Much has been done in the way of alterations and improvements during the incumbency of Canon Lambert Woodard, the present vicar, a son of the well-known educational philanthropist, Canon Nathaniel Woodard, who founded the schools bearing his name, at Lancing and elsewhere. The renovating hand of the late G. F. Bodley, R.A., can be seen in the elaborate rood-screen which has replaced the old screen, now located at the entrance to the chancel It was in St. Paul's Church, Bedford, that John Wesley, in the year 1758, preached called 'The Great his celebrated sermon Assize,' taking for his text the appropriate words, 'We shall all stand before the judgment-seat of Christ.' The 15th-century carved pulpit of white stone from which he delivered that discourse is still to be seen in the chancel aisle. In his 'Journals,' under date of March 10, 1758, Wesley writes: 'The congregation at St. Paul's was very The Judge, immediately large and attentive. after sermon, sent me an invitation to dine with him, but, having no time, I was obliged to send my excuse, and set out between one and two.' The tower contains an excellent peal of ten bells. From the middle of the 18th century the psalm tune 'Bedford,' composed by Weale, has been played on the bells: for the greater part of that time it could be heard hourly, now its strains alternate with other tunes, which are played every three hours.

Mention of the tune 'Bedford' naturally leads to the musical associations of the church which gave Hitherto very little information has been forthcoming about its composer, William It has been assumed that he was appointed organist in 1715, the year in which

This, together with the dates of his degree of Bachelor of Music at Cambridge, and of his death, are all that is known concerning him. But during the recent visit of the present writer to Bedford he was able to search the Corporation records of that period, with results that furnished the following information, which it is believed has not hitherto been made known.

The first refers to the erection of an organ in the Parish Church of St. Paul and the appointment of an organist thereto 'at the cost and charges' of the Corporation. The following of Bedford? The question cannot be definitely answered, but it seems probable. For the purposes of this article Mr. C. Elton Halliley, treasurer of the Bedford Musical Society, has kindly searched the registers of the church to discover, if possible, fresh information concerning the Weale family. Although the registers are greatly damaged by damp, Mr. Halliley has been able to decipher the following entries.

Was George Weale, the apothecary, a brother of William? If so, it seems to suggest, by inference, that the Weales were Bedford folk. There the matter must rest for the present; in the meantime the reader who is interested in the tune 'Bedford' will find its history, together with a facsimile of its earliest known appearance, in THE MUSICAL TIMES of March, 1908, p. 165.

The immediate successor of William Weale in the organistship of St. Paul's Parish Church, was probably John Barlow, whose conduct does not seem to have been above reproach. He received notice to quit that office, in a Corporation Minute dated March 18, 1733:

It is agreed and ordered that John Barlow the present Organist of St Pauls Bedford shall receive his Quarter specifications made by the late Dr. E. J. Hopkins, Slary due at Lady Day next and that the said John Barlow for his notorious misbehaviour and abuse of the Organ shall be immediately discharged from executing the sd office for the future and the said John Barlow is discharged accordingly. The Salary aforesd not to be paid till such pipes belonging to the Organ, that are or may be in the sd Barlows custody shall be returned.

There is nothing to show whether Mr. Barlow returned the said organ pipes. In the Bedford Library is an engraving of the church as it stood in 1732, with this inscription:

A south west prospect with ichnographie of Saint Pauls Church and the Town Arms of Bedford drawn, engraved, and printed by John Barlow, organist of the same. 1732.

It is dedicated to John Carteret, Earl Granville, the eminent orator, diplomatist, and politician in the reigns of the early Georges. Mr. John Barlow evidently combined the occupations of engraver and printer with that of organist. There is a well-grounded tradition in the town that more than a century ago a young musician named Henry Rowley Bishop applied for the organistship of St. Paul's Church. His application was not entertained, however, with the result that he did not make his 'Home, sweet home' at Bedford!

In or about 1832—a very low-water period of ecclesiastical iconoclasm—Gerard Smith's organ was turned out of St. Paul's and sold to the Moravian Church, Bedford—where it still remains, but in an enlarged form—for the sum of £50, an amount at which its handsome carved-oak case alone might have been valued, and a mean-looking instrument by Flight & Robson took its place. The present organ, consisting of three manuals and forty-five sounding stops, was erected by Messrs. Norman & Beard in 1901. Dr. H. A. Harding is the present organist and choirmaster of the church. (See p. 565.)

If only as a study in contrasts—comparing the past with the present—reference to the old-time musical doings in a provincial town is not without interest. So it is with Bedford. Seventy-two years ago a concert given there obtained a somewhat extended notice in the Musical World of July 22, 1836, from which the following is extracted:

BEDFORD.—On the 15th inst. an evening Concert was given in this town at the new Subscription Rooms, by Mr. R. Nunn, which was very well attended by several of the first families in the county. The singers were, Miss Wagstaffe, a Miss Button (pupil of Mr. Nunn) and Mr. Parry Junr. [John Parry]. A select band was most ably led by Mr. Wagstaff of the English Opera House. They performed with great precision Beethoven's Symphony in C, and Mozart's Symphony No. 1, both of which were much relished by the audience. . . .

The concert finished with that mirth-inspiring morceau 'Vadasi via di qua,' which convulsed the audience with laughter, particularly as it was loudly chorussed by the band. This had a most singular effect [no wonder !]; and the encore was the most enthusiastic ever heard within the walls of a concert-room. The company departed soon after eleven, highly gratified with the great treat Mr. Nunn (who presided at the pianoforte) had provided for them.

Eight months later—March 24, 1837—the same journal again recorded another music-making in the town, by reprinting a notice culled from the Beacon, evidently a local journal. It reads:

instrument by Flight & Robson took its place. BEDFORD HARMONIC SOCIETY.—On Wednesday evening, The present organ, consisting of three manuals the first of an intended series of amateur concerts was given and forty-five sounding stops, was erected by in the New Rooms, before an unusually brilliant auditory, to the number, we should suppose, of about four hundred persons. The performances commenced with the overture to Artaxerxes, and although the difficulty to be encountered was considerable, such was the degree of proficiency our amateurs had attained to, that the piece was rapturously encored . . . The beautiful (Occasional) Overture of Handel, commencing the Second Part, was also encored. Of Mr. Nunn's 'Lord, remember David,' no less can be said than that the whole assembly were at once awed and elevated, and the liveliest emotions succeeded its conclusion . . . The greatest credit is due to Mr. Nunn for his exertions in establishing this infant society; and industry in the performers, with the fostering care of its patrons, will combine to make it, in all respects, worthy of the town of Bedford.

After that we may turn to the music-makings of the present day, first making mention of a Choral Society started a few years ago in connection with the parish of St. Martin's, which is doing good work and is flourishing under the able conductorship of Mr. Percy Aston, organist of St. Martin's Church.

The Bedford Musical Society is a vigorous and artistic organization. In regard to its history and achievements, Mr. C. Elton Halliley, its indefatigable honorary treasurer, says: 'The Society, founded in 1867, was for thirty-three years conducted by Mr. P. H. Diemer, but now the active duties of conductor are discharged by Dr. Harding. Each season our object is to perform, if possible, one old and one modern work. Three concerts are given every year, and it may safely be said that the Society is a success both from an artistic and a financial point of view. Practically all the seats in the Concert Hall are subscribed for, and we always receive many more applications for admittance both to the choir and orchestra than we can accommodate. President of the Bedford Musical Society is W. H. Allen, Esq., J.P., a member of the Worshipful Company of Musicians and late High Sheriff of Bedfordshire. The honorary secretary is 1)r. G. H. Goldsmith. The three-manual organ, by Messrs. W. Hill & Sons, now standing in the Corn Exchange, where the concerts are given, was presented by the Musical Society to the Corporation about eight years ago.'

This, then, is a flourishing provincial musical society, with a balance in hand! It has 185 voices in the chorus, and about sixty local members in the In recent years there have been performed Messiah, Elijah, Hymn of Praise, Acis and Galatea, Song of Destiny (Brahms), Golden Legend (Sullivan), Dream of Jubal (Mackenzie), Pied Piper and Blest pair of Sirens (Parry), The Revenge, Last Post, and Songs of the Sea (Stanford), Banner of St. George and King Olaf (Elgar), John Gilpin (Cowen), Hiawatha (Parts 1 and 2) and Blind Girl of Altar have begun to disperse. Castél-Cuillé (Coleridge-Taylor), and The Forging of the Anchor (Bridge).

was fostered by the Bedford Society. He was allowed to attend the practices when, as a youth, he played second horn for three or four years before he obtained his scholarship. 'Is there any music at Bedford?' asked a distinguished professor of the Royal College of Music, when Mr. Button competed for the scholarship four years ago. The answer to this question may be found in the foregoing brief sketch of the town's interests, and in the biographical sketch of Dr. H. A. Harding, its chief musician, which appears in another column.

The thanks of the writer are due to the following for their kind help in the preparation of this article: Mr. Arthur Ransom, author of 'Bedford and Bedford Schools,' a useful illustrated guide to the town; Mr. C. Elton Halliley, honorary treasurer of the Bedford Musical Society; and Mr. H. Smith, of the Town Clerk's Office.

EPIPHANY SERVICES IN THE CHURCH OF SAN ANDREA DELLA VALLE, ROME.

By C. F. ABDY WILLIAMS.

The Church of San Andrea della Valle, famous for its frescoes by Domenichino, for its two important Papal monuments, and for its Epiphany Services, is of enormous proportions, and well lends itself to imposing ceremonies. It is said by some authorities that the church occupies the site of the gardens of Pompey: that in the space now enclosed by its north transept stood the statue of Pompey before which Julius Cæsar fell in B.C. 44, pierced with twenty-three wounds: and that a statue discovered in this locality in the year 1553, is the identical statue of Pompey which was bathed with Cæsar's blood.

The church has been for some time under repair, and was re-opened with great pomp on the Epiphany this year. Its famous 'Presepio,' representing the 'Adoration of the Magi' with figures larger than life, placed above the High Altar, and lighted by electricity, formed a very striking feature as one entered the church. The Epiphany Services last for a week: they commence at 5.30 each morning, and at 6.30 a sermon is preached in Italian. After this, various functions succeed one another without intermission until seven in the evening. So large is the church that it is not unusual to see a fresh congregation assembling in the nave to hear a sermon, before the crowds that have attended the previous Mass at the High

There is only one organ, contrary to the usual To these custom in Rome, where the churches have should be added Dr. Harding's own cantata generally two or more. It is placed in a choir Mucius Scævola. The horn scholar at the Royal gallery at a great height above the western doors. College of Music, Mr. Ernest A. Button-who This instrument, though small, is of excellent has just finished his course at Kensington and quality, and its position enables it to be heard taken the Associateship diploma of the College-1 with the best effect. Moreover, the harsh and unsympathetic tone peculiar to Roman choirs is softened by the size of the church, so that it is a real pleasure to hear a Latin Mass here.

But it is not of the daily Roman Mass that I wish to speak. As soon as it is finished, namely, at about 9.30 each morning during the octave of the Epiphany, it is followed by a Mass in one or other of the Eastern rites and liturgies, with Byzantine music of some kind. It is the music of these Oriental liturgies that I propose to describe. This year they were represented by the rites of the Syro-Maronites, a sect living on and around Mount Lebanon; the Chaldæans; the Syrians, who use the Aramaic language, the same as that spoken by our Saviour; the Ruthenians, a branch of Little Russian Slavs, dwelling round the Carpathian mountains; the Armenians; the Melchites, who appear to have been instrumental in spreading the liturgy of St. Chrysostom, which is used in various languages by most of the Oriental churches; and the Greeks of Lower Italy and Sicily.

These various 'Churches' are said by some to be 'Dissenters' from their own Orthodox Greek Church, but this is a misnomer, as these churches are not independent, but are all under the supremacy of the Pope of Rome, though they are allowed to perform their functions in their own language and with their own rites. To distinguish them from the 'Orthodox' churches of the same names, they are referred to as 'Uniat' churches, that is to say, churches in union with Rome. They have not been strong enough in the past to carry on an independent existence, and have fallen to Rome instead of Constantinople or Russia, and have become a good deal Latinised in consequence, though much of their music has retained its Each of them has its 'college' independence. in Rome, which trains its priests and supplies choirs and acolytes for the various functions.

The music of all these churches is Byzantine. It is far more ancient than Plainsong, from which it differs as much as the latter differs from a modern anthem. It cannot be called attractive on the whole, though there are some features which grow upon the listener, and I have even heard a member of the congregation at St. Andrea humming the strange tunes of the Armenians with the choir, just as Italian audiences hum the tunes during an opera.

Each church has its own music, which differs from all the others; the only features they have in common are the small compass of the melodies and the absence of instruments and of harmony. The Byzantine chromatic scale, containing an augmented second, a reminiscence of the ancient Greek chromatic scale, is heard in some of them. It may be roughly represented in modern notation thus:

Coboos sho s s

but no chromatic melody embraces a complete octave of notes. Theoretically, the intervals are not exactly the same as those we use, but practically the ears of these Eastern singers, trained by Western musicians, have become acclimatised to our intervals. The melodies are mostly built on small portions of a scale, embracing the compass of a fourth or fifth: rarely do they extend to a sixth, and still more rarely to an octave.

No instrumental music of any kind is used: and the want of support in melodies that are repeated in unison day after day undoubtedly produces a lassitude that leads to careless intonation and a vitiation of the ear in certain intervals. Thus in the Armenian rite there is a phrase that occurs again and again:

and the listener is doubtful whether a major or minor third is intended between D and F, until the passage is sung at a higher pitch, when the voices are freshened up, and the interval appears as a minor third.

The first Oriental Mass this year was that of the Syro-Maronites. Arriving early at the church, I found an enormous crowd listening to the closing portions of the Latin Mass, and for five minutes I had to endure the cacophony that is peculiar to Italy during the Benedictus. The choir screams its loudest, the organ gives forth its strongest tones, and all the bells, inside and outside the church, are set ringing at the same time, the whole producing an indescribable din, to be endured with the best grace one can muster.

The Roman Mass being over, the Syro-Maronite priests and choir forced their way through the crowd, and took their places in the 'Presbytery' (the space within the altar rails), the bishop being seated on the north, facing south, and the choir standing on the south, facing the bishop. It must be understood that in nearly all the Eastern rites the choir never sit or kneel: the only change of attitude is an occasional low bending of the body in place of kneeling. The Syro-Maronite choir sang fortissimo throughout, the only soft parts being those sung by a soloist concealed behind the reredos. The ornaments were performed with extraordinary flexibility of voice, by both soloist and choir, and all the music went at a great pace. The reciting note, or dominant (the ancient Greek Mese, referred to by Aristotle and others), was always prominently dwelt on, the ornaments coming at the beginnings and endings of phrases. Some of the intervals seemed to be intentionally between a tone and a semitone, and we know that thirds of tones formed a part of ancient Greek theory. Others seemed to be less than a semitone: but it was impossible to know whether these peculiar intervals were intentional or accidental. In any case, they did not sound as offensive as badly-intoned intervals would in western music.

Melodies are built on fragments of scales, such as:

A rapid passage was repeated many times, thus:

Only once did a melody embrace a whole octave, namely, C to C, with D flat, E natural, A flat, and B flat.

The soloist made rapid variations on the notes:

and the choir on the notes:

Owing to the rapidity of the performance it was impossible to write down the ever-varying rhythmical forms and the ornamentations. The quotations are from a few I was able to catch: but they were not sung in strict time.

The Chaldean music, which I heard the following day, is of an entirely different character. It is almost all within the compass of a minor third, with the pitch varying from time to time. There were endless repetitions of the following formula:

whose intervals gradually became enlarged to:

There were long recitations on F, ending:

and:

which grew into:

and:

and:

Finally we got an inflection embracing six diatonic notes, from the reciting note G, to the C above, and the E below it. After this a return was made to the smaller intervals, and I heard many repetitions of:

Most of the foregoing music was sung slowly, but here and there the choir had the following rapid passages:

It will be seen that the Chaldæan is a primitive form of music, with an extremely limited scale compass.

It was difficult to take notes of the Syrian Mass, because a number of people had obtained special tickets for front seats, and the early comers, knowing nothing of this, had brought their chairs close up to the altar rails, and could not be moved back owing to the pressure from behind. To meet the difficulty chairs were handed over the rails and placed in a semicircle immediately inside them, and the ticket holders, being seated in this extemporised 'Dress circle' and raised above the pavement, obscured the view for the rest of the congregation, who accordingly stood on their chairs in front, and impeded the view of those behind. The music was very monotonous. For the first twenty minutes it was all in the key of F, within the six notes C to A, though it occasionally reached the upper C. There was, as in all these services, an immense amount of repetition. While the bishop was robing, the choir and a soloist sang alternately the following melody:

Then the choir had an unending repetition of:

accompanied by a rattle. The rattle is produced by the shaking of two silver cherubs, surrounded by little bells. The style of performance was for the most part slow and heavy, like the older method of singing the Latin Plainsong, to which it seemed nearly related. To support the choir, whose intonation was uncertain, chords were played very softly on a concealed harmonium, which also gave the note occasionally, but this was entirely unorthodox, and would not be used with a stronger choir.

The two cherubs, which form an important part of the accessories in this service, are called 'Keshotz.' They are used also in the Armenian rites, and point to the extreme antiquity of these two churches. They are mounted on staves, and always accompany the sacred elements, being shaken over or near them at various points in the ceremonies. They are sometimes called Flabelli in Latin, owing to the idea that they were originally fans to keep off flies, when the Mass was celebrated in the open air in primitive times.

But a slight acquaintance with the rites of the Egyptian goddess Isis will show that the Keshotz must be far more ancient than Christianity. All statues of the priestesses of Isis hold in the hand a rattle, called the Sistrum, and specimens of this instrument are to be seen in the various museums of Europe: there are several in the British Museum. The large number of sistra that have been found indicates that the worship of Isis was very widespread, and a picture at Herculaneum shows performance of her rites, in which number of acolytes are shaking the sistrum to scare away evil spirits. Hebrew influence is seen in the form of the Keshotz, for the Cherub was an important feature in the 'Holy of Holies' of the Jewish Temple. Hence the shape and use of the Keshotz seem undoubtedly to arise from a combination of the Hebrew cherub and the Isiac note here and there, in the place of the bells of sistrum, and the original idea was to scare away the Roman church. The strain on the voices, evil spirits from the sacred elements.

An even older symbol is also used in the Armenian rites, in which the priests carry a crosier formed of two snakes intertwined, shaped exactly like the 'Caduceus' of the god Mercury, but This is an obvious remnant without its wings.

of the ancient Serpent worship.

To return to the music of the Syrians. perpetual use of the scale of F major was at one time broken by a short passage in D minor, of which scale, however, only the first five notes were heard, and a return was soon made to F major. A little life was infused when the soloist sang:

several times over. The Keshotz was much in evidence later on in the service.

On January 10 the Greco-Ruthenian Missa solennis was sung. The robes of the celebrant and his two assistants seemed to be entirely of gold, but the ritual appeared to differ very little from the Roman rite. The choir, consisting of eight students of the Ruthenian College, stood on the right of the 'Presbytery,' robed in those blue and yellow gowns which help to brighten the streets of Rome. The influence of the Russian church is very strong in the music. Ancient methods are entirely discarded. The voices were magnificent, and formed a double quartet of tenors and basses. The music, differing from that of all other Eastern rites, is in very simple four-part harmony, entirely homophonic, all the parts moving by equal notes. There are no suspensions, and the only discord used is that of the dominant seventh in all its inversions, without preparation: it is of very frequent occurrence. There is no modulation except once, when a transitory modulation is made from C to G. The unaccompanied part-singing was in the most perfect ensemble, and the lights and shades were unsurpassable. The only keys used are G major and C major and minor. Of course there is considerable monotony, but the excellence of the voices, and the perfection of the style of singing on this occasion went far to Many phrases end with the formula: atone for it. Of the composition I cannot say much. It is in the style of some of the part-songs in the Orpheus collection, and reminded me especially of 'Integer vitæ.' But there were also occasionally long passages in thirds, which sounded very commonplace. The finest part was an arrangement of Adeste fideles, with some six or seven stanzas, the melody of which differed in some details from the version usually sung in the Roman and Anglican churches.

Towards the end of the Mass the music becomes more and more commonplace. Curiously enough a whole movement is made up of passages which occur in the duet that our grandfathers used to sing, 'All's well': the similarity seems too striking to be merely a coincidence. A Glockenspiel of three bells, placed on the altar steps, sounded a single especially on the first tenors and first basses, became very evident, and I could easily perceive the heroic efforts they made to contend with the many noises that always go on in an Italian church, the squeaking of chairs on the pavement, the bells at side altars, the rattle of money in the collecting plate, and the general buzz of a great crowd, all of which contributed to exhaust these most artistic singers.

On January 11 the Greco-Melchite Mass was sung. It was, however, Low Mass, the music being performed by a single voice, with the same melodies that were to be heard in the Greek rite, to be described later. On January 12 the Armenian Mass was celebrated with great pomp by the Archbishop of Amaser. Armenia was a kingdom some 2,000 years before the Christian era: it was on the Armenian mountain of Ararat that Noah's Ark stranded after the Flood. Armenians claim to have been the earliest nation to recognise Christianity, in that their King Abgar, a contemporary of Christ, wrote a letter to Him, and received a promise of salvation in reply. Their liturgy and music, according to tradition, arose under their first Patriarch, whose name was Gregory, in the beginning of the 4th century: and the great antiquity of their music is evident

The Armenian service was the most popular of all, and the crowd was enormous, noisy, and Children amused themselves with pushing. making chairs squeak on the pavement, groups of people on the outskirts of the congregation were engaged in conversation. The choir, twenty-seven strong, forced their way as best they could through the crowd, and having entered the 'Presbytery, stood, according to custom, in a semicircle around the steps of the altar. The nine central members of the choir and the six deacons attending the bishop were all most gorgeously robed. Owing to the choir completely occupying the space just inside the altar rails, the whole congregation had to stand on the chairs in order to see the The music was sung fairly rapidly, ceremonies. and for the most part was quite rhythmical.

the interval D, F being sung less than a minor third. On hearing this last year I thought it belonged to one of the peculiar Eastern scales with intervals unknown to the West, but I am now convinced that the ear of the choir has become vitiated by constant repetition without an instrument, as I have already explained.

drawn aside. however, is n stands outside corresponding English church rhythmical, but in length, the

The Introit, of great length, was founded on the phrases:

but both phrases were much varied in the course of the nine stanzas. This introit, whose commencing words mean, 'Hail! Profound Mystery, &c.,' is a comparatively modern addition, having been composed and introduced into the ritual about 1205. In the regular ritual the ancient scales were very evident, the melodies and their ornaments being sung, however, far too rapidly to be written down during the performance.*

The notes they embraced were for a long time:

The following phrases occurred many times in various parts of the service:

The language used is that of ancient Armenia, which differs from the modern as much as Latin differs from Italian. The vestments and the rites are more elaborate than those of any other church. The Keshotz are of gold, and larger than those of the Syrians: and the tinkle of their bells forms a notable feature.

The last of the Oriental Masses took place on January 13, the octave of the Epiphany. It was the Greek rite, in which there are certain musical features well worthy of note. In their own church of St. Athanasius, attached to the Greek College, the structural arrangements are made with a view to their special requirements: at San Andrea they are of course in accordance with the requirements of the Latin rites. The Greek sanctuary is concealed behind a solid screen, as in the Greco-Russian church in Moscow Road, Bayswater. The screen is pierced by three doors, which are closed by curtains, and the Holy Table is only seen by the congregation at certain moments during the Mass, when the curtain of the central door, corresponding to the 'Veil of the Temple,' is drawn aside. The choir of St. Athanasius, however, is not concealed as at Bayswater, but stands outside the screen, in two divisions, corresponding to the Decani and Cantoris of the English church. The music is for the most part rhythmical, but the phrases are rarely of four bars in length, the phrase of five bars, or a mixture of three-, four- and five-bar phrases being preferred. Hence, though there is little to remind one of Plainsong in these melodies, their rhythmical structure is at the same time very different from that of modern music, with its preponderance of four-bar phrases.

The ancient modes are very well marked, but the kyrie is frequently sung in semitones, thus:

With this exception the melodies are diatonic.

The object of dividing the choir into two portions is primarily the same as in the Anglican church, namely, for antiphonal singing. But in the Greek church it has a further significance, since it has given rise to a very beautiful form of vocal accompaniment, which seems to be of ancient standing. It is well known that the primitive Christians abolished the use instrumental music in their rites, owing to its connection with the pagan temple and theatre: and the Antiphon, a short vocal passage sung before each psalm, and first used at Antioch, was intended to replace the instrumental prelude that was essential to every song. The Greek church seems to have gone a step farther, and to have replaced the accompaniment that was formerly played on the lyre, for the two half-choirs accompany each other alternately in a charming and peculiar manner that is unlike anything in Western music. The accompaniment—always sung pianissimo, however much the melody may vary in power—is of two kinds. The first and oldest is called Ison. This word is, properly speaking, the name of the neume that represents the Final of a mode: the Ison that is sung is the Final or any other note of the mode that will form a concord with the last note of the majority of the phrases. Ison is sustained throughout a piece until the mode changes, when a new Ison is begun: but occasionally, if the melody will permit of it, two Isons, forming a perfect fifth with one another, or even three, forming a major or minor triad, are heard. Ison is not written, but is sung by ear: and amongst the concords that may conclude a phrase or a whole piece is the perfect fourth, so that one frequently hears the Amen sung to a third followed by a fourth. The Western musician may think from the description that such an accompaniment must be a mere drone bass; but he would be surprised at the solemnity and religious effect that is produced by the pianissimo Ison, sustained in a tone of such beauty as no musical instrument can ever be capable of: the intensely human effect of this music grows on one more and more the oftener it is heard.

^{*} The music has been published in Western notation, and with harmony added, by Issaverdenz, Venice, 1877, but it differs entirely from that sung at Rome.

The second form of accompaniment is called Organum. It is not the organum of the mediæval Latin church, but consists of sustaining a chord, pianissimo, built on the lowest possible bass note, surmounted by its fifths or fourths, and octaves, as far as the voices in the choir will extend. Like the Ison, it is sustained as long as the melody permits it to form concords with the endings of phrases: and the differences between it and Ison are that while Ison may contain a third, Organum does not, and while the melody in the plagal modes extends below Ison, Organum extends both above and below the melody, which is always in the tenor range. Where boys' voices are employed they sing either in octaves with the tenors, or sustain the upper notes of the Organum, when that form of accompaniment is used.

In the more solemn portions of the Mass the whole, both melody and accompaniment, is sung pianissimo, with excellent effect. Monotony there is, of course, but it is explained that monotony is rather sought than avoided.

The liturgy is that of St. Chrysostom, of which a beautifully printed little edition in several modern languages, together with the Greek, but without music, has just been issued by the College of St. Athanasius. The musical notation of this Church is in neumes, the reading of which is easy to those who have a familiar knowledge of the Greek Modes: the notation is, however, entirely different from the neumes of the western church.

The pleasure of listening to these ancient forms of music is akin to the interest and pleasure one feels in contemplating any ancient monument, such as the Walls of Rome, or the Temples of Paestum. This music is a vestige of the art of a long past age, the contemplation of which conjures up in the mind pictures of the greatness of those who created it, and a respect for the past, which mere reading of history does not so vividly convey. It is also worthy of note that the more one cultivates a feeling for ancient music, the more intensely does the best modern art that is worthy of the name appeal to one: the most 'advanced' expression of the musical art of the present day seems to become as clear as daylight after antiquarian study, while the mind resents all the more whatever is trivial or of no artistic value.

Occasional Hotes.

Dr. Arne and Samuel Wesley. Has any connection been traced between the composers of 'Rule, Britannia' and 'In exitu Israel'? Probably not. We are therefore glad to make known the following incident in the lives of these distinguished musicians, separated by a difference in age of sixty-six years. In the Department of Manuscripts at the British Museum is a volume containing autobiographical notes and biographical sketches of contemporary musicians, written by Samuel Wesley and mostly in his own hand. Under the heading 'Dr. Arne,' Wesley says: 'I remember that when I was about twelve years of age there was a Morning Concert at Hickford's Room, in Prayer Street for the heading of two French lades. in Brewer Street, for the benefit of two French lads who played extraordinarily well upon the violoncello. The principal instrumental performers were all young people, among whom was Miss Weichsel (afterwards Mrs. Billington) upon the Piano Forte, her brother on the violin, and myself on the organ, on which I played extempore, and Dr. Arne was so well pleased therewith, that when the concert was concluded, he insisted on my playing a second time, after which he honoured me by placing his right hand on my head and saying, at the same moment, "This is a head, indeed."

The above incident recalls a somewhat similar event in the childhood of Thackeray. One day his aunt, with whom he lived, found that her husband's hat exactly fitted her little nephew's head. She became alarmed, and sent for the doctor. When that disciple of Æsculapius arrived, he said: 'Yes, Madam, the boy has a large head, but there is a good deal in it.' No one can question the accuracy of that diagnosis. To return to Wesley. With the above age-limit—'about twelve years of age'-as a clue, it was not difficult, with the aid of old newspapers in the British Museum, to trace the concert at which Wesley received the benediction of Dr. Arne. Here is the advertisement exactly as it appeared in the Public Advertiser of May 20, 1777:

For the Benefit of Mess. Rauppe. Two youths, the eldest not 14 years old. At Hickford's Great Room, Brewer-street, this day, at twelve at noon precisely, will be performed a grand concert of Vocal and instrumental music.

Tickets 10s. 6d. each, to be had of Mess. Rauppe, at Cartiers, Perfumers, in Spur-street, Leicester-fields; at Mr. Napier's, No. 494 Strand; and at the above Rooms.

It will be observed that the name of the 'young Gentleman' who was to 'perform extempore on the organ' is withheld in the above announcement. may have been at the request of the boy's father, Charles Wesley, the hymn-writer, who probably shunned this publicity on his own behalf and that of his gifted son. Whatever may have been the reason of this reticence, we have here an incident in the remarkable career of Samuel Wesley which appears to be unknown. Within a year of this event, Arne had passed away.

That Wesley, Bach-enthusiast as he was, could proved by the following extract from the biographical notes already referred to. He says: 'The late Dr. Arne may be justly ranked with the first geniuses that England has produced. Nothing can exceed the suavity of his melodies, of which the multifarious songs he has set may be considered an undeniable evidence. His operas of Artaxerxes, Elfrida, Comus, part of King Arthur, &c., are monuments of everlasting merit, and, after Purcell, he may be truly stiled the prince of English melodists. I have long thought that an annual Festival in commemoration of this great Man would be no more than a just tribute due to his very superior talents.'

As a sequel to the biographical sketch of F. H. Barthélémon in our August issue (p. 515), the following advertisement, from the Public Advertiser of March 30, 1778, may prove acceptable.

Assembly Rooms, Hanover Square. Mrs. Barthelemon's Benefit.

This day, the 30th instant, will be a select entertainment of Music: in which Miss Cecilia Barthelemon will act and sing (for that night only) an Italian Scene, which she performed before the Queen of Naples and the Queen of France; wherein she imitates the famous Signor Ansani, the best tenor in Italy. The music by Signor Paesiello, from a favourite opera performed at Rome, called 'La Disfatta di Dario,' and (by particular desire) she will sing a duetto with Mrs. Barthelemon: The music by Signor Vinci. Concertos and solos by Messrs. Fisher, Tacet, Cervetto, and Mr. Barthelemon, who will also play a solo on the Ipolito, an instrument of five strings, invented by him, and made by Mr. Merlin.

After the concert Miss Barthelemon will dance a Minuet. Tickets, Half a guinea each, to be had of Mrs. Barthelemon, at the late Dr. Arne's, Bow-street, Covent Garden. Tickets delivered for the 24th inst. will be admitted.

The reference to the place where the tickets could be obtained is somewhat pathetic, as Arne had died only twenty-five days previous to the postponed concert. It will be remembered that Mrs. Barthélémon was a niece, by marriage, of Arne. No further information seems to be obtainable concerning the Ipolito, the instrument which Barthélémon invented and upon which he performed at his wife's benefit.

The recently issued Journal of the Folk-song Society (No. 12, Part 3 of vol. iii.) is a specially acceptable contribution to a subject which is attracting much attention. Its well-written preface is from the pen of Mr. Percy Grainger, who treats of 'Collecting with the phonograph' in a manner that is as thorough as it is interesting. In these twenty-three pages the clever Australian pianist covers a great deal of ground that is of practical value to the folk-song collector. of his experiences in gathering old songs from the lips of veteran singers are distinctly amusing. Mr. George Wray, a North Lincolnshire octogenarian, is a case in point. He carried coals, as much as twenty tons a day, until he was seventy-three, and then he 'give over.' A great dancer in his younger days, he took a prize for dancing at the age of fifty-four, performing to the accompaniment of a fiddle, which he considers 'better than anything to dance to.' His brother (now dead) was a left-handed fiddler, and much in request at country dances in and around Brigg; he learned all his tunes by ear, as he could not read a note of music. Mr. George Wray 'considers folk-song singing to have been destroyed by the habit of singing in church and chapel choirs, and waxes hot on this subject, and on the evils resultant upon singing to the accompaniment of the pianoforte. While very few will agree with him on this point, there are many who will endorse his conviction 'that people might all keep their vigour as late in life as he, if they did not overfeed.'

Of the twenty-seven folk-songs contained in this issue of the Journal, more than half were phonographically recorded by Mr. Percy Grainger at Brigg, in Lincolnshire. It must of course be admitted that the phonograph is most valuable as an aid in faithfully recording these old and often odd ditties, but at the same time it cannot be denied that the strait-jacket of musical notation ill-fits the eccentricities, so to speak, of the melodies and their curious rhythms. instance, No. 1 in this book—'Six Dukes went a-fishin''—consists of fifty-six bars, and there are no fewer than thirty-nine changes of time-signature! alternating, and that not regularly, between triple and quadruple rhythm; moreover, the directions at the head of the song are: 'The notes somewhat detached, and with slight stress on nearly every beat.' Considering these frequent changes of rhythm and the fact that triplets are used eighteen times in the course of the said fifty-six bars, it becomes a question whether bar-lines should be used at all. In another song (No. 11) a bar of $\frac{3}{4}$ is followed by one each of $\frac{5}{5}$, $\frac{3}{6}$, $\frac{7}{6}$, $\frac{11}{6}$; to these succeed two bars of $\frac{3}{4}$, and one each of $\frac{7}{6}$ and 12, and so on. At the same time one cannot help admiring the industry shown in notating the tunes from the phonograph. The words of the songs are unobjectionable, but it is a pity that they fall so short of the music in interest.

Sir Frederick Bridge has addressed the following letter to the Editor of The Times, on the subject of the National Anthem; it appeared in the issue of July 29:

SIR,—In your notice of the Quebec pageant I read 'the band played the National Anthem, and presently 15,000 people were singing.' Alas! how different it is in England! In Canada no gathering of importance concludes without the whole assembly joining in the National Anthem—at least that was my experience lately. But in England we are afraid to sing it. Even in the City of London, so loyal to the King, it is generally left to a very moderate soprano vocalist, who sings it as fast as she can, with, usually, an accompaniment terrible to hear. The guests preserve a rigid silence and a sad face. I believe a good deal of this abstention is caused by want of knowledge of the words. Could it not be sung often in our own schools? Would it really offend any voters if this were done by order of the Education Department? I hope not.—Yours very truly,

J. FREDK. BRIDGE.

Cloisters, Westminster Abbey, July 28.

The correspondence which has been evoked by the above letter has not been very resultful in practical suggestions for the remedy of a defect which Sir Frederick deplores. One correspondent says: 'The reason why we are afraid to sing the National Anthem is due to the fact, so far as my own observation goes, that it is invariably attempted [? pitched] in too high a key.' There is a good deal of truth in that statement. For loyal vocalizations of the crowd, the key of G is quite high enough for 'God save the King.'

The important manuscripts of Mozart and Beethoven which formerly belonged to Miss Harriet Chichele Plowden, and which were described in our issue of September, 1907, formed the subject of an application to Mr. Justice Swinfen Eady, in the Court of Chancery, on July 31, who decided that the testator had full power to dispose of those precious autographs. Therefore the manuscripts will pass into the possession of the British Museum, according to the terms of the late Miss Plowden's will.

Many of our readers will learn with regret that Canon Gorton has resigned the living of Morecambe on account of ill-health. He will be greatly missed at the Competition Festivals which have made the Lancashire watering-place musically famous.

The announcement that the 'Trompes et Trompettes Dijonnaises' band (conductor Mons. A. Meullenot) and 'Le Chorale d'Anzin et Valenciennes' would perform on August 15 at the Franco-British Exhibition, lent a much-needed fillip of special interest in musical doings at the White City. The Dijon band duly appeared, and were accorded a good reception that testified at least to the strength of the entente cordiale. The band is peculiarly constituted of instruments without crooks or pistons, and therefore capable of playing only the harmonic series of one fundamental note—E flat or a very sharp D. It is obvious that this limited equipment allows little scope for tonal effect. The leading-note is conspicuous by its absence, and the fourth degree of the scale is painfully sharp. It says much for the traditional politeness of the French nation that, notwithstanding these deficiencies in their instruments, they heroically began the recital with a version of the National Anthem which was not at first recognised by the audience and was afterwards stoically endured. Other pieces were played in which the subdominant occurred, but the band was at its best in the hunting music and fanfares, which were executed with exhibarating virility. It was difficult to maintain interest in a long programme in which all the pieces were in the same key and generally alike in rhythmic mould; but the experience was interesting, and we owe thanks to our visitors for their painstaking efforts to afford us this glimpse of a form of music popular in France. Although the members of the Choir came to the Exhibition with a large party of friends, they did not perform. The Palace of Music—about the only place in the Exhibition where music is seldom or never heard! -was opened in vain for their reception. rumoured that they sang on entering the grounds, but the authorities could not secure them for the promised

It was in some respects unfortunate that the French band had to perform immediately after the splendid band of H.M. Grenadier Guards. It is not too much to say that the fine performances of this superb organization, under the masterful control of Lieut. Dr. A. Williams, are one of the most attractive features of the Exhibition.

De Nieuwe Courant of 'Zaterdag, 15 Augustus, 1908,' announced the following concert to be given at Scheveningen:

KURHAUS.

Het 12de symfonie-conçert van Vrijdag 21 Augustus brengt de symfonie no. 35 D-dur van Mozart; Pibrock, Schottische suite voor viool met orkest van Campbell-Mackenzie, voor te dragen door den concertmeester H. Witek en de symfonie no. 8 F-dur van Beethoven.

English readers who are non-conversant with the Dutch language will not experience any great difficulty in discovering from the above extract that Sir Alexander Mackenzie's 'Pibroch' (no final 'k,' please, Mr. Printer) was announced to be played by Herr Witek, who is the leader of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra.

The attention of our readers is directed to pp. 610 and 611 of the present issue, which contain an annotated catalogue of Mendelssohn's choral works that are suitable for performance during the year 1909, the centenary of the composer's birth.

To the quaint sayings and word-twistings of Sir George Grove can be added the following, taken from his own copy of the Crystal Palace Concert word-book of October 21, 1871, now in the possession of the present writer. At the above music-making, Madame Rudersdorff sang Mr. Randegger's scena 'Medea,' in the recitative of which occurs the line:

> Erri da polo a polo il piede inquieto, (Chase him from pole to pole with restless steps).

In the margin of his book Grove has written, 'From Pohl to Pole,' the names of two of his intimate friends, Carl Ferdinand Pohl and Dr. William Pole. Just like him!

The following 'Gems from a musical examination paper' reach us from a reliable source:

Senza sordini. Without sordidness—that is, the music is not to be played or sung in a dull manner.

Suspension. The music is to be suspended.
Schumann's Works. 'Paris and the Peri,' also 'Faust's

Walpurgisnacht.' Mendelssohn wrote 'The last waltz' while in Wales, as Mendelssohn generally writes in sharps, and he is particularly fond of chords.

Schumann's music is especially noted for the rippling vivace style, rippling running music for the treble, and slow, firm bass work. His music generally consists of flats, or written in a minor mode.

AN ELGAR CONCERT AT OSTEND. (BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Ostend, August 14.

A great honour was accorded to Sir Edward Elgar, and through him to English music, when M. Léon Rinskopf invited him to conduct a concert consisting entirely of his own compositions. This took place at the Kursaal to-night, and it was a very great pleasure to me to be present at the first musical 'Festival'—as the programme designated the concert—in Belgium, if not on the Continent, devoted exclusively to the works of one of our most distinguished composers and conducted by himself.

The programme is subjoined, literally as printed:

VENDREDI, 14 AOUT 1908 à 8 1/2 heures du soir FESTIVAL with a French translation, and each orchestral piece had a short descriptive note, of which the following, treating of the 'Variations on an original theme,' will serve as a specimen :

Ces variations, sur un thème original, portant la dédicace: "A ceux de mes amis qui y sont dépeints"; il est entendu qu'elles dépeignent plus au moins la personnalité de ces amis. Les caractères et idiosyncrasies évoqués offrent des contrastes très marqués, les mouvements allant du largo au

Le thème andante en sol mineur est intitulé Enigme, l'auteur ayant voulu suggérer que la solution ou la portée de l'idée qu'il contient varie selon les portraits des amis auxquels l'auteur à songé dans ses Variations.

When Sir Edward Elgar appeared on the orchestra, the band rose and greeted him with a brilliant fanfare, thus paying him a tribute of high and rare distinction. The orchestral playing can be summed up in one word—'superb'; and in regard to M. Rinskopf, the able conductor of the orchestra, and the director of the Kursaal, nothing could have been more cordial than their attitude of profound admiration and appreciation towards the hero of the day; indeed, all concerned spared no pains in contributing to the success of this most interesting event.

I have no hesitation in saying that Sir Edward has achieved a very great success, both as a composer and conductor, by this performance, which is nothing less than a triumph for British music. The applause Unknown yesterday, celebrated to-morrow, perhaps.

The words of the songs were printed in English and throughout was remarkable for its genuine expression After the concert 'God save the of feeling. King' was spontaneously played by the band with wonderful effect, whereupon the entire audience, numbering some 7,000 people, rose and remained standing until our National Hymn was finished; and then the enthusiasm for the composer-conductor was so overwhelming that he had to appear again and again in response to the calls of the delighted hearers of his music.

By a fortunate circumstance, some of the most eminent French and Belgian composers happened to be in the town to adjudicate upon an opera competition, and they were all present at the rehearsal of the Elgar concert. It was an act of gracious hospitality on the part of M. Rinskopf to invite these distinguished gentlemen and others to meet Sir Edward Elgar at lunch, and a happy thought to have them photographed in a group. This interesting picture I was fortunate enough to be able to procure for reproduction in THE MUSICAL TIMES.

The following are some translated extracts from the press notices of the festival:

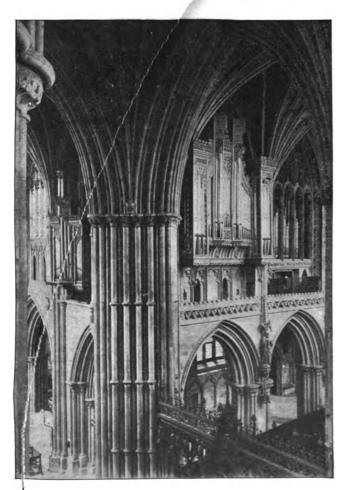

Our readers will find a special notice of the Elgar festival. . . It was a manifestation of the highest importance, not only artistic but international. There is, indeed, no doubt that the exceptionally warm reception reserved for the British composer will increase the appreciation of Ostend among our neighbours on the other side of the channel.

This may be said of Edward Elgar, the British composer, who came on Friday to reveal to us that it is possible to be English and to be a musician, a combination which we had been fond of thinking impossible. . . . Let us proceed to say that the abundance of happy harmonic discoveries, richness of invention, intensity of expression, power in sweetness—a rare charm—form in Edward Elgar a combination of the most precious gifts with which an artist-nature can be endowed. . . Edward Elgar seems to be very easily impressed by the agitations of nature . . . his very easily impressed by the agitations of nature . . . his music dashes onwards, rushes, bounds, then softens again, melts to return to sympathetic harmony. Listen to 'In the South' and to the 'Wand of Youth,' and it [the music] is beautiful . . . because it is beautiful. Elgar, without being a revolutionist, has forged a personal harmonic language, very beautiful and very living, and that is a sufficient claim to glory. . . The fashionable and discerning audience of the Kursaal made this plain to Edward Elgar in the triumph they accorded to him. It seeks of Octobrol Amount 12. they accorded to him. -L'Echo d'Ostende, August 17, in Haven, Sabbath morning at Sea-slumber. marvellously, with extremely rich effects of harmony. the exception of the 'Variations,' which Rinskopf has sometimes given us, all these pieces were new to the orchestra. Sir Edward was astonished at the first rehearsal, and if he had not been assured that it was the case, he would never have believed that the orchestra was reading his works for the first time, so superior was their rendering of them. And yet Elgar is difficult, very difficult, and likes to stop the orchestra for a scarcely per eptible 'nuance.' This renders the compliment to Rinskopf infinitely greater, more flattering, and the gentlemen of the orchestra were deeply touched by the felicitations of the English master. The audience was enormous, and composed of all nationalities.—Le Carillon, Ostend, August 18, 1908.

On Friday there was a remarkable, sensational soirée. Sir Edward Elgar, the great English composer, conducted a concert consisting only of his own works, full of colour, originality, and full of surprises . . Mile. Tilly Koenen interpreted the cycle Sea-pictures, in which the composer has had recourse to all the colours of his palette, from the most tender to the most sombre. He painted -Journal d'Anvers, August 22, 1908.

The Figar festival marks what the English call 'a red-letter day' in the history of the Kursaal concerts. Sir Edward Elgar, who occupies at the present day a remarkable position among our greatest composers, exercises an especial charm by his limpid melodiousness, by the clearness of his polyphony, and the beauty of his orchestral 'timbre.' Above all, his music is always written in a noble style, and is always of irreproachable purity. There is not a single page in the long programme which the illustrious English composer submitted to us, which might not serve as a model. It is sane music, it is Art, in the full acceptation of the word.

THE ORGAN IN LICHFIELD CATHEDRAL (By permission of A. C. Lomax's Successors, Lichfield.)

Church and Organ Music.

LICHFIELD CATHEDRAL ORGAN.

In fulfilment of the promise made in our last month's issue (p. 517), we give the specification and some illustrations of the rebuilt organ in Lichfield Cathedral. As a preliminary, the organist, Mr. John B. Lott, has furnished the following note explanatory of the new and improved location of the instrument. He says: 'The organ has been removed from S. Stephen's Chapel to its present position, and it has been reconstructed and enlarged by Messrs. Hill & Sons, London. The idea of removing the instrument from its former unsatisfactory position to a special chamber in the clerestory is entirely due to Sir George Martin, who, when presiding at the organ at some of the Diocesan Choral Festivals up to the year 1893, frequently suggested the present site to the precentor and to the organist. In a letter, dated February 9, 1908, to the organist, Sir George said: "I am so pleased you like the idea of having the organ up aloft. I am sure it is right; and it will add to, rather than diminish, the features of your most beautiful building. The other position [in S. Stephen's Chapel] was bad in every way."

'BEDFORD' INTERLUDES BY SAMUEL WESLEY.

Among the large collection of Wesleyana preserved in the Department of Manuscripts at the British Museum are some hymn-tune interludes composed by Samuel Wesley. In connection with the article 'A visit to Bedford,' in another column, it may not be considered inappropriate if we give specimens of these interludes by selecting those appertaining to 'Bedford,' first giving the tune as transcribed by Wesley:

It will be observed that while Wesley rightly notates the tune in triple rhythm, he introduces a rather unfortunate passing-note in the melody at the penultimate bar, and with it an equally unfortunate six-four chord. Here are the 'Bedford' interludes in all their old-world quaintness of bygone Psalmody:

The Rev. W. B. Dams, M.A., a deputy minor canon of St. Paul's Cathedral and assistant-master at the Choir School, has been appointed to the minor canonry at Westminster Abbey, vacant by the death of the Rev. J. H. Cheadle, and also to the headmastership of the Abbey Choir School, in succession to the late Rev. R. C. Plackmore.

WILLIAM GAWLER AND F. H. BARTHÉLÉMON.

Mr. Frank Kidson, of Leeds, sends the following supplementary note to the biographical sketch of François Hippolite Barthélémon which appeared in last month's issue (p. 515):
In 1785 William Gawler, organist of the Asylum for Female Orphans, published an engraved work entitled:

The Hymns and Psalms | used at the Asylum | or House of Refuge for | Female Orphans. | Printed for W. Gawler, organist to the | Asylum | [Quarto, pp. 94.]

The title-page is faced by a charmingly designed and engraved picture by Stothard, 'published according to the Act, October 20, 1785, by W. Gawler': this fixes the date of publication. Probably in the same or the following year (1786) appeared 'A supplement to the Asylum Hymns, &c. London, printed for William Gawler, organist to the Asylum, Lambeth Butts.' As this 'Supplement' commences at p. 95, its pagination follows on that of the original work. On p. 99 appears as Hymn 16, 'Awake, my soul,' exactly as given in the facsimile in the biographical sketch of Barthélemon above referred to. Messrs. Bland & Weller having acquired Gawler's original plates, re-issued the book, but this re-issue can only have been between the dates 1793 and 1818, the period of the firm's existence

The compositions by Barthélémon in Gawler's book are numerous. A few of the pieces are 'adapted by W. G.,' evidently Gawler, and 'God save the king' is ascribed to Anthony Young. This ascription, however erroneous, is, so far as I am aware, the first of the mythical statements which connect Young's name with the music of the National Anthem. Living successively at 19, Paradise Row and at 17, Walcot Street, both in Lambeth, after he had given up his organistship, Gawler had a moderately extensive business as a music-seller and music publisher. About 1799 or 1800 he published much sheet music of a miscellaneous character, including songs, sonatas, and sacred music. He advertised his Asylum Hymns' at 10s. 6d, his 'Course of Psalms,' and his 'Harmonia Sacra.

On the same subject Dr. W. H. Grattan Flood writes: Barthélémon was in Dublin throughout the season 1771-2; but I can find no trace of him in the Irish capital during 1784.

The Methodist Recorder of August 20 contains an interesting article, by the Rev. James E. Crawshaw, on Haydn's Farewell Symphony, using that 'good-bye' work of the genial 'Papa' as an analogy of the triennial flittings from one Circuit to another to which Wesleyan ministers have to submit at this time of the year. He says:—'The music seems appropriate for the present juncture in many Methodist circles. Seven or eight hundred ministers have been playing a "Farewell Symphony" of their own. There is the same brave and hearty commencement of their final duties, the same apparent conflict between regrets and forced cheerfulness, and the same ending pianissimo, with all the instruments silenced but the two violins, that we get in Haydn's music.' With regard to the 'two violins,' the analogy is not quite so obvious to the general reader, but the article is one that may be read with profit, apart from its Wesleyan Methodist associations.

Mr. Andrew Carnegie has generously promised to contribute the sum of 200 towards a new organ for the parish church of St. Paul's, Bermondsey, on condition that the vicar and churchwardens raise £200 to meet his gift. As the parish is probably the poorest in London, outside help is needed and will be gratefully received by the vicar, the Rev. C. H. Bowden.

HUDDERSFIELD AND DISTRICT ORGANISTS' ASSOCIATION.

This brotherhood of organists, formed in 1904, continues to maintain its interests and activities. The honorary secretary, Mr. George F. Garner, writes: 'We have had a most successful year, judged from all points of view. Our membership keeps firm, about 110. We have a capital library of books and music, to which we are making additions every year. The attendance at the meetings is satisfactory; and both The attendance at the meetings is satisfactory; and both educationally and socially the Association is proving beneficial and is fully justifying its existence. The lectures delivered during the past year have been as follows: "Organist Voluntaries," Mr. J. F. Sykes (President, 1907-8); "Some thoughts on the teaching of organ playing," Mr. F. Clarkson; "Choral Societies," Dr. E. C. Bairstow; and "The Home Music Study Union," Mr. H. A. Fricker. Special organ recitals have been given by Mr. William Faulkes, of Liverpool; Mr. J. W. Pearce, of Huddersfield; and Mr. C. H. Moody, of Ripon Cathedral; and Mr. Reginald Goss Custard, organist of St. Margaret's Church, Westminster, was the chief guest at the annual dinner of our minster, was the chief guest at the annual dinner of our Association in January last.' Mr. Garner adds: 'If only organists throughout the country could realise the splendid work these Associations are doing, we should, I feel sure, have one in every town throughout the land. I am pleased to say the movement is growing, and I look forward to the time when organists as a body have an organization which will be a real help and benefit to them in their high and sacred office.'

The death of Mr. Ira David Sankey took place at Brooklyn, on August 14, at the age of sixty-eight. Mr. Sankey obtained world-wide fame as the singing colleague of the late Mr. D. L. Moody at their mission services, and more especially as the editor of the collection of mission hymns entitled 'Sacred Songs and Solos,' which has had an enormous circulation in various countries.

Mr. C. F. South has recently celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of his appointment of organist and master of the choristers of Salisbury Cathedral, when he was the recipient of many congratulations and presents in recognition of his faithful service during the last quarter of a century.

Mr. E. H. Lemare recently gave a successful organ recital in the Auditorium, Ocean Grove, New Jersey, U.S.A., when the audience numbered 8,000 people.

THE BRITISH MUSEUM BLUE-BOOK.

The annual 'Return' (Blue-Book) of the British Museum for the year ending March 31, 1908, has just been issued. Under the heading 'General progress at the Museum, Bloomsbury,' the Director (Sir Edward Maunde Thompson) thus refers to the temporary closing of the Reading Room last year:

Provision having been made by the First Commissioner of His Majesty's Works for the renovation of the Reading Room, which had not been re-painted or re-decorated since it was first opened in 1857, the room was closed and placed in the hands of the contractors on the 15th April. It was re-opened to readers on the 1st November [1907]. The entire fabric was carefully examined and tested, and, where necessary, repaired. The iron-work, of which the room is largely constructed, was found to have suffered no deterioration in the lapse of time, and scarcely a rivet had failed. . . . The original scheme of decoration was not followed, the colours which were at first applied to details of the great dome not being repeated, but white paint and gold alone being employed. The result has been a very great improvement of the light in the room.

The arduous work of removing the books of reference from the Reading Room previous to the renovation, of revising the collection, of weeding out obsolete books and of replacing them by recent works and additions, and of refilling the shelves after the renovation was completed, was punctually and successfully accomplished by the stuff of the Library.

With regard to Music, the following information is given under the heading 'Department of Printed Books':

10,111 Musical Publications have been added to the collection. Of these, 9,617 were received under the provisions of the Copyright Act; 341 by Colonial Copyright; and 153 were acquired by purchase.

These figures show an extraordinary increase upon last year's additions—10,111 as against 7,483. Even allowing for the increase of 121 works 'acquired by purchase,' and a decrease of III of those received under Colonial Copyright, the fact remains that, under the Copyright Act, no fewer than 2,618 more musical works were received than in 1907! While this remarkable increase testifies to the creative industry of musicians, it should be remembered that each addition to the catalogue may represent a symphony, an oratorio, or other work of importance, or the vulgarest comic song from across the Atlantic, all of which pass through the hands of Mr. Barclay Squire in the course of the year.

The acquisitions of musical interest are stated as

The last ten leaves of the 'Historia Baetica' of Carolus Verardus. Printed by Eucharius Silber at Rome, 1493, completing the copy of the work in the Library. The last leaf consists of the music of a four-part song printed from blocks, probably the earliest example of mensurable music printed at Rome. Presented by A. H. Littleton, Esq.

A collection of 1,377 pieces of sheet music, chiefly of the eighteenth and early interest the centuries. Presented by the Royal College of Music.

In addition to the above donations, the Museum has acquired the following printed books:

'Certaine notes set forth in foure, and three parts to be song at the Morning Communion, and Evening Praier.' (Two parts, Medius and Bassus.) John Day, London, 1560.

'Mornying and Evenyng Prayer and Communion.' (Two parts, Contra-Tenor and Tenor.) John Day, London, 1565.

These four parts form a complete copy of this work, which was designed to supply polyphonic settings of the Book of Common Prayer, with a few anthems. The composers were Thomas Tallis, Thomas Causton and several others. Only two other copies of either edition are known, one at Westminster Abbey, the other in the Bodleian Library.

Zange, Nicolas: 'Kurtzweilige Newe Teutsche Lieder.' 4 Pts. Cologne, 1603. Wanting the title-page and pages 1—4 of the first part. Only one perfect copy of this book, which contains a musical setting of the street cries of Cologne, is known to exist.

Bach, Johann Sebastian: 'Sechs Chorale für Orgel,' published between the years 1747 and 1749.

Only three other copies of this work are known.

This scarce publication of the great Cantor's is referred to by Spitta in his 'Life of Bach' (English edition, vol. iii., pp 219 and 294), who suggests the year 1750 as that of publication.

In the Department of Manuscripts the most important acquisitions are four in number, as hereunder described in the Blue-Book:

A purchase of exceptional interest is a large Latin Psalter, Hymnary, etc., with a partial Anglo-Saxon gloss, written in the South of England (possibly at Canterbury) in the latter part of the 10th century, and decorated with fine ornamental initials. It belonged successively to Archbishop Cranmer, Henry FitzAlan, Earl of Arundel, and John, Lord Lumley, and was perhaps at one time in the Royal Library, in which Lord Lumley's collection was absorbed after his death in 1609.

Collection of songs, etc., by Arne, Boyce, Handel, Pepusch, H. Carey and others, chiefly written for Marylebone, Ranelagh and Vauxhall Gardens; 18th cent.

Scenes from operas by J. B. Lully, A. Campra, and other composers; circ. 1719.

'Observations on Chanting, explanatory of a new system, in the autograph of Robert Lucas Pearsall; 1851.

The Latin Psalter above mentioned is exhaustively described by Abbot Gasquet and Mr. Edmund Bishop, in a volume recently published by Messrs. George Bell & Sons, entitled 'The Bosworth Psalter: an account of a Manuscript formerly belonging to O. Turville-Petre, Esq., of Bosworth Hall, now Addit. MS. 37,517 at the British Museum.'

Abbot Gasquet considers this ancient volume to be one of the most important MS. English Psalters in existence, one which, strange as it may seem, has up to the present time escaped notice by students and archæologists. He says: 'It is more like a book for liturgical use in late Saxon times than any with which I am acquainted,' and adds—in the published volume above referred to—'The Bosworth Psalter is in more ways than one unique among similar English books, and that more than any other known early manuscript it partakes of the character of a complete volume for the public recitation of the Divine Office by those who follow the Rule of St. Benedict.'

The manuscript contains music, written in fine neums, to the Venite Psalm, doubtless for use at Matins, also for two hymns, the Lucis Creator optime, Iste Confessor, and Christe splendor gloriæ.

Robert Lucas Pearsall's 'Observations on Chanting' is printed in full, and described by Mr. W. Barclay Squire in the Sammelbände der Internationalen Musik-Gesellschaft, vol. viii., January-March, 1907, p. 166.

TWO FESTIVAL NOVELTIES.

SIR HUBERT PARRY'S

'BEYOND THESE VOICES THERE IS PEACE.'

As in nearly all his choral compositions, Sir Hubert Parry has himself compiled the text of this his latest work, to be produced at the Worcester Musical Festival on the 9th inst. The words of 'Beyond these voices there is peace' have been selected entirely from the Bible, two books only of Holy Writ being laid under contribution—Ecclesiastes (chapters 1, 2, 3, 11 and 12) and Isaiah (chapters 26, 40 and 55). Their wealth of diction and the composer's skill in arranging these grand passages combine to make a firm foundation whereupon to erect the musical superstructure.

The work—laid out for soprano and baritone soli, chorus and orchestra—opens with a short Introduction for orchestra, forty-three bars long in 3-4 time. In this are summarized, in anticipation, the ideas which the composer has had in his mind. Its opening bars are the 'motive' of bitterness and discontent with the never-ceasing disappointment begotten of the fruitlessness of the search after mere worldly pleasures :

The answer thereto anticipates, with slight intentional variation, the 'motive' of 'all encompassing peace':

Soon after appears the theme of 'All things are full of weariness,' which forms an important feature of the opening chorus. The answer to that (in the trombones) is the first few bars of the 'motive' of the 'everlasting sign' in the last chorus. This, in its turn, leads to a reference (pianissimo) to the 'motive' of 'all encompassing peace,' which here is left floating in the higher spheres, when the discontent of the human voices reasserts itself, leading at once into the first chorus, 'What profit hath man of all his labour wherein he laboureth under the sun?'

The opening chorus gives general expression to the vanity and transitoriness of man's mundane desires, in successive episodes which emphasise human futility by contrast with eternal and changeless things, culminating in the theme of the discontent and bitter ejaculations flung from voice to voice, 'All things are full of weariness,' &c., 'That which hath been is that which shall be, and that which hath been done is that which shall be done; and there is no new thing under the sun.'

Then the individual, represented by the baritone soloist, takes up his parable—'I said in mine heart, Go to now, I will prove thee with mirth; I said of laughter: It is mad, and of mirth, what doeth it?'—thus trying to beguile himself with the recapitulation of the pleasant things of the world which he has experienced. His attempt at mundane joyousness and self-satisfaction is expressed in a characteristic theme; but before he is half-way through with it, the sense of the fruitlessness of it all grips him, and he goes on in growing rage vainly endeavouring to cajole himself with the 'motive' of 'mundane joy.' Alas! his efforts are vain! The 'motive' of bitterness returns, and he is forced to the bitter confession, 'All is vanity, vanity and vexation of spirit, and there is no profit under the sun.'

Thereupon the chorus enters with a commentary— 'To everything there is a season, a time to every purpose under heaven,' the tune being anticipated and amplified by the massed strings in the introductory bars. The first part of the chorus is cast somewhat in the form of a dialogue between the various voices, accompanied and held together by the ceaseless undercurrent of the 'motive' so identified with the sentiment of the words, in constant variation. After the culmination, with the words 'A time for war, a time for peace,' the chorus, in a second section, expresses the sense of eternity, as the fulfilment and complement of the idea of 'a time for every purpose under heaven' in the first part; the words being 'Whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever,' and the ideas which follow it, and this passes into the theme of the 'all encompassing peace' in its final form and spreading much wider than before.

Then the individual personal man begins once more to try to find comfort in the idea 'Truly the light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is to behold the sun'; but the sequel is more final even than in the first solo, for the thought of 'the days of darkness' haunts him, and he remembers that the end of it all will be that 'man goeth to his long home, and the mourners go about the streets,' culminating in the thought that 'The dust shall return to the earth as it was, and the spirit to God Who gave it.' The 'bitterness motive' again recurs, answered by that of 'all encompassing peace,' here in its serenest form.

The earthly voices have been hushed to silence, when the soprano soloist calls, 'Ho! every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters,' thus figuratively presenting the reminder that beyond these earthly voices there is the solution of all discontents. Here the music has references to the 'motive' of 'discontent' and that of 'peace,' finding its full outlet at the words 'It shall be for an everlasting sign which shall not be

The chorus which follows is a series of reflective episodes parallel to the first chorus, but expressing episodes parallel to the first chorus, but expressing the immensity of the Eternal in answer to the futility of the mundane desires. The 'motive' of the 'everlasting sign' recurs again and again to emphasise and unify the conception. To the questions 'To whom will ye liken God? or what likeness will ye compare unto Him?' the answer comes in the figurative reference to the 'motive' of the 'all encompassing peace'; and this theme, combined and alternated with that of the 'everlasting sign,' continues to pervade the music till the reflective portion ends and passes into the active, yet figurative, expression of joyousness, 'But they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength.' This, after passing through several phases, culminates in the passage 'They shall mount up with wings like eagles, &c.,' and finally passes to the re-statement of the theme of the 'everlasting sign.'

At what the composer calls 'The clue,' the solo soprano and chorus join in softly with the final reflection—which is the root of the whole matter—'Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee,' accompanied by a last reference to the theme of the 'all encompassing peace.'

MR. C. B. ROOTHAM'S 'ANDROMEDA.'

The programme of the Bristol Musical Festival, to be held next month, contains two works composed by natives of the city, their birth-years being separated by more than a century—Samuel Wesley and Cyril Bradley Rootham: the older musician will be represented by his noble motet 'In exitu Israel,' the younger by his dramatic cantata 'Andromeda,' to be produced on October 15.

Mr. Rootham has selected the text of his cantata from the fine poem by Charles Kingsley, written in 1852, when he was thirty-three years old and a country parson at Eversley. The story is too well-known to need repetition, but it may not be without interest to give Kingsley's views on the subject. Writing to his friend, J. M. Ludlow, in the summer of 1852, he says:

I send you more Andromeda . . . You will see at once the difference in style between the opening and the latter part—right or wrong, it was instructive. I felt myself on old mystic, idolatrous ground, and went slowly and artificially, feeling it unreal, and wishing to make readers feel it such. Then when I get into real human Greek life, I can burst out and artificially, the series the investories the series of the ser and rollick along in the joy of existence. . . .

You know that Andromeda myth is a very deep one. It happened at Joppa, and she must have been a Canaanite; and I cannot help fancying that it is some remnant of old human sacrifices to the dark powers of nature, which died out throughout Greece before the higher, sunnier faith in human gods; and that I shall just bring out, or bring in, enough to make it felt without hurting the classicality, by contrasting her tone about the gods with that of Perseus, whom she is ready to worship as being of a higher race, with his golden hair and blue eyes. Oh, my dear man, the beauty of that old myth is unfathomable; I love it, and revel in it more and more the longer I look at it. If I have made one drawing of Perseus and Andromeda I have made fifty, and burnt them all in disgust. If I conceive a thought (objective, that is, of course), I almost always begin by drawing it again and again, and then the incompleteness of the pencil (for paint I can't) drives me to words to give it colour and chiaroscuro.

Let us now turn from this interesting sidelight upon the poem to its musical setting by Mr. Rootham.

Dedicated to the memory of the composer's mother and finished in April, 1905, the cantata is laid out for chorus and orchestra, and the following solo voices: soprano (Andromeda), contralto (Cassiopæia and Athené), and baritone (Perseus). The work opens with a short introduction for orchestra, which embodies two main themes. These are 'leit-motiven' in the fullest sense of the term, in that they are introduced in both the vocal and orchestral parts so as to knit together the various episodes of the story. The first of these 'leit-motiven' may be designated the 'Andromeda' theme, for it occurs wherever Andromeda herself and the doom overshadowing her are made prominent. In the Introduction and in the course of the work it appears in the minor key, and it is not until the very end, after the tragedy has been averted and she is safe and happy, that the theme is given in the major key.

The second theme embodies the idea of Perseus with the divine power of Athené supporting him. There is yet another 'motive' which appears throughout the cantata: it forms the opening phrase of the first chorus (given out by tenors and basses in unison), and is variously treated on its several re-appearances. A characteristic 'monster' figure typifies, in its various forms, the sea-monster and its terrors whenever they are mentioned. When Andromeda is left alone upon the rock, the orchestration—muted strings, with an occasional wail of the Andromeda theme by the wood-wind - is intended to express her troubled thoughts and also the lapping of the waves at her feet.

Athene's appearance, near the end of the work, is marked by a simple melody and a corresponding figure of accompaniment-four oft-repeated chords in triple time producing a special effect, and, through four different keys, working up to a climax, with variations in the orchestra for each change of key. The cantata is brought to a close with a re-statement, by the orchestra, of the three main themes, thus finally emphasising at the end, as at the beginning, the unification of the work.

SOME VALUABLE MANUSCRIPTS:

BACH, HAYDN, MOZART, BEETHOVEN AND MENDELSSOHN.

Herr Geheimrath Ernst von Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, nephew of the composer, has presented to the Emperor of Germany, who has ordered their preservation in the Royal Library, Berlin, a splendid collection of precious manuscripts, all in the autograph of their respective composers. The generous donor has kindly furnished us with a list of these treasures, on which additional details have been supplied for the to which additional details have been supplied, for the purposes of this article, through the courtesy of Dr. Rudolf Kaiser, of the Royal Library, Berlin:

MENDELSSOHN.

Violin Concerto.

Most of the above manuscripts speak for themselves. It may be remarked, however, that the 'Orgelbüchlein' of Bach is the fountain-head source from which Mendelssohn prepared his English edition of the Choral Preludes, issued in 1845, to which detailed reference was made in the articles on 'Bach's Music in England' which appeared in this journal between September and December, 1896 (see pp. 797 and 798 of the December issue). Spitta—who, by-the-way, makes no mention of this English publication-refers at length to the above manuscript in his 'Life of Bach.' He says: 'In the beginning of the year 1879 I found in the possession of Herr Ernst Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, of Berlin, a second autograph of the Little Organ Book. It had belonged to Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy in his time, and he had supplied it with a cover and title-page written in his own hand. It was in his possession in 1836. Two leaves out of it he gave to his betrothed for her album. A third leaf he subsequently gave to Madame Clara Schumann. These donations are noted on the cover This autograph, which has lost its original title, consists of fourteen elegantly and clearly written leaves in small oblong quarto.' For the remainder of Spitta's exhaustive description of this precious manuscript the reader is referred to the 'Life of Bach,' English edition, vol. i., pp. 647-656.

All the four Symphonies by Haydn belong to the twelve forming the Salomon set, and composed for England; the first and last of the above quoted beginnings are those known as the 'Surprise' and the publication of the autograph scores of all Beethoven's characteristic enthusiasm he mooted the proposal in a letter to The Times of September 15, 1891; moreover, it was typical of his warm-hearted heroworship that he should also enthuse his friends and even his relations. In a letter to his brother-in-law, the late Dean Bradley, he says :

'Clock' symphonies respectively.
In addition to the 'Orgelbüchlein' of Bach, the three Beethoven symphonies and perhaps others of the above masterpieces—the Violin concerto, of course—formerly belonged to the generous donor's uncle, Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy.

A. P. Stanley is to you what Beethoven is to me-every additional trait or expression is a gem, and gives me the keenest pleasure. Those facsimiles I proposed in my letter to The Times will be an inestimable boon to musical people all over the world, and I hope to get them carried out. Suppose one could have a facsimile of the MS. of St. Matthew's Gospel, or of St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians, or that instead of having to go to Rome or Petersburg to see it, one could have it in one's own house, and handle it, and mark it, and have it always at hand, eh? And the parallel is rather close, because the Symphonies, like the Epistles, have many places in them where the original must have been mistaken by the editor.

This interesting proposal, however, was never carried out; doubtless its great cost, and the chances of so few would-be purchasers were deterrents against realizing a wish so very dear to the heart of Beethoven-loving 'G.' How he would have rejoiced in Herr Ernst von Mendelssohn-Bartholdy's gift!

REHEARSING FOR A CHORAL COMPETITION.

For the purpose of non-identification I will locate the rehearsal in the village of Loom Fowt. If the place is mythical, the members of the choir are human beings filled with a desire to win the first prize in a competition soon to be held in a neighbouring town. The first prize, not the second, nor the third, is to be won by these worthy Lancastrians. The Loom Fowt choir consists of forty voices, mostly cotton-mill workers and colliers, leavened by the inclusion of the learned village newsagent, whose decision is absolutely final whenever methods of pronunciation are in dispute.

The conductor of the choir, Silas by name, is likewise conductor of the village brass band. He is a gradely musicianer' who earns his daily bread in the humble occupation of 'twisting-in' at the little weaving shed down in the valley. To-night this 'gradely shed down in the valley. To-night this 'gradely musicianer' has forgotten all about healds and reeds, for he is living in the atmosphere his soul loves bestan atmosphere which he would permanently breathe were it possible for his body to subsist upon atmosphere He is about to take his choir through that magnificent barbaric chorus of Elgar's, 'The Challenge of Thor,' and as I am well known to the conductor and his committee, they have granted me the privilege of remaining in the practice-room during the progress of this momentous rehearsal.

The conductor stands before his choir without a copy of the music, for he has committed to memory every note of that wonderful chorus. 'Neau then! are yo' ready? Hauve a minnit. As this has to be sung at th' competition 'beaut 'companiment, Ah'll just gie yo' three little beats like this (! ! !) afore yo' start, an' then yo' mun brast off like clockwark. Piano, mind yo', piano! Neau then (sotto voce), one, two, three':

I am the God Thor, I am the War God, I am the Thunderer.

One of Sir George Grove's pet ideas was the ablication of the autograph scores of all Beethoven's mphonies in photographic facsimile. With a maracteristic enthusiasm he mooted the proposal D flat on th' fust part o' th' word "Thunderer," tha'rt not supposed to be sellin' coal, an' thairt not supposed to be sheautin' at a footbaw match. If Ah've to spayke to thee ony more, tha'll be one 'at winno' sing wi' this kire i' th' competition.'

After a little homily upon the wickedness of wasting valuable time, another start is made:

Here in my Northland, My fastness and fortress, Reign I for ever ! (Tenors and basses.) Here amid icebergs Rule I the nations.

Another clap of the conductor's hands; this time it is the tenors who are at fault. 'Well! of all th' wake stuff 'at ever Ah yeard i' me life, this is th' wakest. Yo're noan sittin' on icebergs, yo're singin' abeaut 'em. Do let us ha' some tone. Thry an' imagine yo're on Crowden Moor i' th' middle o' winter an' i' th' dead o' neet, wrapped up in a fur-lined o'ercoat, wi' a drop o' summat warm an' stimmilatin' i' th' pocket an' 'ondy to geet at. Just thry, theer's good lads! Neau then, from mark B agen.'

At this attempt the effort is decidedly better, and the singers are allowed to proceed:

> This is my hammer, Miolner the mighty.

'Stop!' cries a thunderous voice from among the basses. It is the learned newsagent, our specialist in pronunciation. He is about to exercise his authority, granted by the Committee, to stop the singing whenever he detects anything wrong in that particular department. 'It's thee, Smiler,' says the learned newsagent. 'Ah've towd thee times beaut number 'at tha munno' bring thy coal-pit manners to these rehearsals. Tha may talk abeaut a "hommor" as mich as tha' likes when tha 'rt i' th' pit, but when tha 'rt here it 'll ha' to be "hammer," with an aspirate on th' fust letter. Dunno' let me ha' to tell thee ony more.' (To the conductor) 'That'll do, Silas. 'Tha con proceed.' He did!

Reviews.

Form in music. By Stewart Macpherson. [Joseph Williams, Ltd.]

In these days of nebulous eccentricity on the part of young composers, it is a plucky thing to issue another book on the subject of Form. But as a professor of harmony and composition at the Royal Academy of Music, Mr. Stewart Macpherson doubtless has very good reason for making known his views on the subject, even though they differ from those held by other theorists, and showing students the methods which the great masters adopted to make their deathless creations intelligible from a constructive point of One has only to sample such masterpieces to find that form is not another word for formality. The wide range of examples given in the book proves this, and nothing can be better than that the minds of budding composers should be imbued with the principles of form as applied by those who have well deserved the designation 'genius.' is perfectly true that composers cannot be made by textbooks, but their pathway towards success may be smoothed by a careful study of the works created by the great ones in music, and Mr. Macpherson's treatise deserves the attention of both teachers and their pupils. We notice that in Ex. 19 (p. 11) the extract from Mendelssohn's 'O rest in the Lord' The conductor claps his hands and immediately is given in the key of G. Is it not better to quote extracts there is silence. With his eyes fixed on one of the exactly as they appear in the text, rather than by changing there is silence. With his eyes fixed on one of the exactly as they appear in the text, rather than by changing basses, he sarcastically remarks: 'Ah towd thee at the key signatures? A wrong clef on p. 57 needs correction.

Folk-songs of England. Book ii. Folk-songs from the Eastern Counties. Collected by R. Vaughan Williams.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Much has been said during recent years regarding the wealth of English folk-songs. Granted that our national melody, as represented by these unsophisticated songs, is of excellent quality, the question naturally arises, 'Where can I obtain them arranged in a practical form?' This question can to some extent be answered in the collection under notice, 'Folk-songs from the Eastern Counties.' It is the second of a set of albums containing representative examples of folk-songs noted down in the different English counties, a series which it is intended even to extend to Scottish and Irish folk-songs recently collected.

The reputation of Dr. Vaughan Williams as a cultured musician is a sufficient guarantee that the folk-melodies he has noted will lose nothing in their treatment, for his well-known sympathy with the songs of the people would restrain him from any attempts at their 'improvement.' He has collected largely in Norfolk, with the result that many of his tunes carry with them a flavour—a sort of salty whiff—of Yarmouth town. They may very well have been the favourite songs to which Dan'l Peggotty and his maritime friends listened, or that they took part in during the evenings spent at 'The Willing Mind,' although it must be confessed that nowhere does Dickens record that Dan'l was of a vocal turn of mind. Anyhow, included in the book there is the favoured ditty of Captain Cuttle:

'Give me the lad whose tarry trousers Shines in my eyes like diamonds bright.'

Sailor songs predominate in the collection, and among them is a traditional survival of the 16th century ballad 'Captain Ward,' whose piracies on the ship 'Rainbow' have been sung in the original ballad and its traditional versions for many centuries. Dr. Williams's tune is a fine, breezy strain. Excellent in its stirring melody, it is undoubtedly an acquisition to our stock of folk-songs. 'The bold Princess Royal,' another pirate song, popular in many counties, is also to be welcomed. The 'Captain's Apprentice,' a gruesome narrative of ill-usage, and the 'Saucy bold robber,' are, with the first two named, genuine forecastle ditties. 'On board a Ninety-eight' is perhaps cast rather too much in the Dibdin mould to be a true folk-song; it dates from early in the 19th century, although its melody appears to be much older.

Of rural songs there are one or two good examples; of these 'Bushes and briars' is the best. It is a most charming tune, and, so far as I am aware, Dr. Williams is the first to give any version of it the dignity of print. Judging by the numerous copies found on broadsides and the many other ballads which are directed to be sung to the tune, this song must have obtained a considerable degree of popularity. 'The lark in the morning' (alias 'The pretty ploughboy'), 'The lost lady found,' 'The Sheffield apprentice,' 'A bold young farmer,' and some others are folk-songs that have already been published in the several recent collections, but Dr. Williams's versions are all of interest, either as confirming old, or as bringing into notice fresh forms of these pleasant old melodies.

All collectors of folk-songs are aware that the majority of folk-singers ignore the commencement of each succeeding verse of a song by going through fresh verses of the entire ditty without making any break. In some cases Dr. Williams has apparently considered it desirable to fall in with this method, but changing the harmony of each verse. Thus he judiciously avoids any feeling of monotony. Although some old-fashioned singers may expect a brief pause between the verses, to be filled up by the accompanying instrument, yet where the stanzas are short it is, after all, a good method that the folk-singer, in his eagerness to get on, has instituted.

It is a trite but nevertheless a true observation, that all lovers of folk-song will be glad to make the acquaintance of this collection, in which will be found many simple songs of great charm.

Chats on Violoncellos. By Olga Racster. With eighteen illustrations.

[T. Werner Laurie.]

The violoncello cannot claim so many votaries as its little brother (or is it sister?), the violin. It is well within living memory that the late Mr. Chorley, of the Athencum, decreed that the violin was not a lady's instrument, and a writer in the Spectator of April 14, 1860, said, 'Female violinists are rare female violoncellists are rarer still, and we have never met with one.' How difficult it would be now to estimate the number of lady performers thereupon; and it is not inappropriate that a lady should write upon an instrument that is capable of great depth of expression.

expression.

Miss Racster remains so faithful to her title that she eschews chapters, and calls the half-dozen sections into which her book is divided 'Chat the first,' Chat the second,' and so on. Writing on her subject with a breezy enthusiasm, she covers a wide period in the history of the violoncello, from the crudely constructed Ravanastron of ancient times to 'The King' violoncello of Andreas Amati and other perfect instruments. The crwth, the viol, the tromba marina also come under her survey, as well as the 'development of the technique of violoncello playing.' In her 'Chat the fifth' the authoress treats of 'Two eighteenth-century women players of the Viola da gamba'—Mrs. Sarah Ottley and Miss Ann Ford (afterwards Mrs. Thicknesse)—concerning both of whom interesting and original information is given. The book is one that merits commendation by reason of its subject matter and the illustrations which accompany its readable text. On p. 178 there is a little misprint: the name of 'John Cause, the artist' should be spelled 'Cawse.'

The music, an interesting example of the talent of the distinguished organist, shows keen perception of what is appropriate combined with directness of expression and musicianly resource. The anthem is opened by tenors and basses in unison, who are succeeded by a soprano soloist, and the first section ends with a four-part chorus. tempo then changes from Andante to Allegretto, and the remainder of the work consists of a jubilant chorus, which includes a fughetto of emphatic character. Mr. John E. West always writes effective church music, and this is specially obvious in the two anthems by him now under consideration. 'The eyes of the Lord' is written in four parts throughout. The music flows gracefully and reverently, and the harmonic scheme is rich without being complex. The return to the first subject is accomplished in a particularly expressive manner, and the pianissimo conclusion is equally impressive. 'Righteous art Thou, O Lord,' is more ambitious in style, and is suitable or a choir of considerable numbers. It will be found easy to read, and the changes of tempo are well calculated to impress the significance of the text. The anthem is designed to be sung on Sexagesima Sunday, but is well adapted for general use.

Mr. West has edited the two anthems respectively composed by Attwood and Crotch. That by the former master is largely written for soprano solo with an independent organ accompaniment, but towards the end the full choir enters impressively with imposing results. Dr. Crotch's anthem is designed for bass solo and chorus, and the part-writing for the latter demands a well-trained choir. The work is laid out in three sections—an Andante moderato, in which the solo is the predominant feature; a meditative Largo, in which the choir echo the words uttered by the solo voice; and a jubilant Allegro moderato, chiefly for the full choir. Mr. Henry John King's anthem is specially suitable to the Lenten season, but is also available for general use. It begins with a short organ solo, which is succeeded by a duet for first and second sopranos. This leads to the entrance of the full choir in solid harmony, but considerable independence characterises the choral writing, and a well-designed climax concludes the work.

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC AND SIMS REEVES.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—In a report in the Daily Telegraph of June 23 of the banquet given in honour of Dr. W. H. Cummings, at De Keyser's Royal Hotel, the chairman, Professor Prout, is stated to have said:

'Somewhere between 1870 and 1875 Dr. Cummings sang the very beautiful and extremely difficult music which Bach allotted to the Evangelist in the Passion—a part which had been previously offered to Mr. Sims Reeves, and declined as too difficult.'

Now, Sir, will you kindly allow me to speak on behalf of that most accomplished and beautiful singer, the late Sims Reeves, and to say, for the information of Professor Prout, that Sims Reeves sang the tenor solos in the above oratorio on Easter Eve (April 23), 1859, in St. George's Hall, Windsor Castle. Mr. G. F. Anderson, Master of the Musick to Queen Victoria, conducted the work on that occasion, Bennett assisting him. Your humble servant had the honour of singing in the chorus as first tenor, as I was then a member of the original Bach Society, of which Bennett was the founder.

Yours truly, EDWARD PEACOCK.

BACH'S 'IT IS FINISHED' AND MENDELSSOHN'S 'IT IS ENOUGH'—A COMPARISON.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—It is somewhat interesting to observe one or two curious points of resemblance between the airs 'It is finished,' in Bach's 'St. John' Passion, and 'It is enough,' in Mendelssohn's 'Elijah.' In each case the first section of the movement is of a slow and mournful character, in accordance with the words, and has an important obbligato for a solo instrument. Bach uses the viola da gamba, Mendelssohn its successor, the violoncello. The music of the second section in each solo ('See Judah's hero,' and 'I have been very jealous') is in strong contrast, being full of energy and vigour, and both composers add several instruments to the strings employed in section one. In each case the third section is very short, scarcely more than a coda. The notes of sorrow are resumed, the obbligato instrument echoes the voice, and the very melodies bear a likeness to one another.

I do not for a moment wish to accuse Mendelssohn of conscious imitation. He was so devoted a student of the older master that the above resemblance is probably but a striking instance of the way in which his mind was permeated with the Bach influence.

Yours faithfully,

Sydney, Nova Scotia. H. LOUISE BURCHELL. July 22, 1908.

Obituary.

The sudden death at the age of sixty-four of NICHOLAS ANDREIEVICH RIMSKY-KORSAKOV is recorded with regret. We have only just been able, through the enquiries of Mrs. Newmarch, to discover the exact place and date of the sad event, which took place on June 8, at St. Petersburg. An excellent biography, from the pen of Mrs. Newmarch, of the distinguished Russian composer is given in the new edition of 'Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians' (vol. iv. p. 102), and an interesting appreciation of his art-work is contained in César Cui's 'La Musique en Russie' (Paris, 1880).

The pupils of Liszt number one less by the death of WILLIAM MASON, which event, we regret to record, took place at New York on July 14. The third son of Dr. Lowell Mason, he was born at Boston on January 24, 1829; thus he bad reached his eightieth year at the time of his decease. He studied at Leipzig, under Moscheles, Hauptmann, and Ernst Richter, and was long recognised as a leading pianist in New York. There, with Theodore Thomas and others as colleagues, he founded chamber concerts, and in 1872 he received the degree of Doctor of Music from Yale University. Dr. William Mason wrote a treatise on 'Touch and Technique,' which received the approval of Liszt, and his 'Memories of a Musical life' (New York, 1901) are specially interesting in connection with the Weimar circle of musicians in 1853. He was a Swedenborgian.

The death is recorded with regret of HENRY GOUGH TREMBATH, which took place at Herne Bay, on July 31, aged sixty-five. A native of Penzance, he studied at the Royal Academy of Music. He was formerly an organist and conductor of a choral society at Truro, but since 1874 he held the organistship of St. John Baptist Church, Woodlands, Isleworth. Mr. Trembath graduated Bachelor of Music at Oxford in 1869, and in 1875 he was elected, honoris caust, a Fellow of the Royal College of Organists, having gained one of the composition prizes offered by that institution. As a composer he is best known by his anthem 'Let not your heart be troubled,' which appeared in The Musical Times of May, 1887.

CAPE TOWN MUNICIPAL CHORAL FESTIVAL.

The first week of this festival, held in the new City Hall, concluded on July 14. The works performed included 'Samson,' 'King Olaf,' and 'Hiawatha,' and despite the prevailing depression in trade a great success attended the concerts. The combined choral societies, numbering 360 voices, under the able direction of Dr. Barrow Dowling, Municipal Director of Music, sang magnificently. The attack and tone of these excellent singers were excellent, while their steadiness in the florid choruses of 'Samson' evoked the admiration of all the musicians present. The orchestra, under the leadership of Mr. Ellie Marx, numbered eighty performers, and played with great ease and discretion, the tone of the strings being particularly good. The principal soloists were Miss Perceval Allen, Mrs. Forsyth, Miss Helen Juta, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Albert Archdeacon. In addition to his work as bass soloist, to the last-named artist fell the task of organizing and managing the whole South African Festival Tour: in fact, were it not for the public spirit displayed by Mr. Archdeacon, these festivals would not be possible.

At the conclusion of the tour 'The Messiah' will be given to celebrate the jubilee of the Cape Town Choral Society, and H.E. Lord Selborne has commanded a State concert to be held in Pretoria on August 7. Miss Perceval Allen, Mr. William Green and Mr. Archdeacon expect to arrive in England on September 5.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The fourteenth season of Promenade Concerts at Queen's Hall, conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood, with Mr. Robert Newman as manager, commenced on August 15, in the presence of a large and enthusiastic audience that bore genuine testimony to the appreciation of these performances. There was no actual novelty in the opening programme, but a very pleasing feature was Sir Edward Elgar's orchestral suite, 'The wand of youth,' produced at one of the Queen's Hall Symphony Concerts, conducted by Mr. Wood, on December 14 last. The dainty and captivating numbers were crisply and expressively interpreted, and the Suite had a most hearty reception. The composer was present, having arrived a few hours previously, after having conducted a concert of his own compositions at Ostend, to which reference is made on p. 581. The soloists at Queen's Hall on the opening night were Mr. Jacques Renard, Miss Esta d'Argo, and Mr. Lloyd Chandos, whose artistic efforts enhanced the enjoyment of the evening. The analytical programmes this season are written by Mrs. Rosa Newmarch.

NATIONAL CO-OPERATIVE FESTIVAL.

CRYSTAL PALACE, August 22.

This was the twenty-first festival organized in connection with the National Co-operative Society. When in the eighties Ruskin was consulted by the promoters of the great movement of which this musical festival is an off-shoot, he told them that it should be part of their mission to make the people sing and dance. At once they set to work to encourage the formation of district choirs, and to arrange for those great inspirational combined gatherings at the Crystal Palace and elsewhere which have proved to be a valuable factor in the development of the co-operative movement on its social and educational sides. For the first few years the music practised was perforce of a simple and popular kind, but under the energetic guidance of Mr. G. W. Williams progress was always steadily made. Seven years ago it was boldly resolved to attempt higher flights, and the services of Mr. Allen Gill were enlisted. It is now not too much to say that under such able and experienced guidance the combined choirs have now achieved a front place in organizations of this kind.

The following is the programme of the concert given by the huge adult choir, assisted by a large and competent orchestra, on August 22:

O be joyful in the Lord (rooth			Prout
The keel row	olk-so	ngs	Thomas F. Dunhill
Jack Horner			Theodore Distin
Orchestral (' Nell Gwyn' Danc	es)		E. German
How calmly the evening			Edward Elgar
Strike the lyre			T. Cooke
Rest thee, my little one			Thomas Facer
Now is my Chloris			Frank Idle
O great is the depth ('St. Paul	')		Mendelssohn

The choir was on the whole well balanced, the basses being particularly good. The breadth of Professor Prout's chorus made it specially suitable for the occasion. Mr. Dunhill's delicate and beautiful arrangements were very tastefully sung, and the contrapuntal devices of 'Jack Horner' told effectively as music if not as humour. The 'Nell Gwyn' dances were played to the great satisfaction of both choir and audience, and were a capital foil to the tranquil charm of Elgar's very simple part-song. 'Strike the lyre' still holds the field as a well-written specimen of the glee school. The basses here made the most of their exceptional opportunities of display. Mr. Facer's piece was fluently and smoothly sung, and Mr. Frank Idle's new part-song was sung con amore. A fine performance of the Mendelssohn chorus was perhaps the most creditable achievement of the The audience was large and abundantly programme. appreciative.

A feature of the proceedings of the last few years has been the performance of a large junior choir, under Mr. Charles J. Jeapes. The programme was an interesting one, and at the | meister Stransky.

same time was constituted of better-class music than is usually chosen for juvenile concerts at the Palace. One item was a two-part marching song for voices, combs and drums, composed by S. P. Waddington, to R. L. Stevenson's words 'Marching, here we come.' This was effective, although the numerous drummers were too independent in their rhythm. 'I love all things' (Pinsuti) was well performed, and this may be said of 'The dewdrop's folly' (Myles B. Foster) and 'The village blacksmith' (Weiss). Mr. Jeapes conducted with decision and spirit. His success will no doubt add to his ambition to fill the orchestra with children on future occasions.

The competitions in four classes were successful in bringing forward nineteen junior and fifteen adult choirs. The results and other particulars are given in our supplement, THE COMPETITION RECORD.

OPERAS IN ENGLISH.

The Moody-Manners Company commenced, on August 17, its sixth season of grand opera in English at the Lyric Theatre. The opening performance was Lohengrin, in which Mr. Philip Brozel, as the Knight of the Swan, made his reappearance in London after an absence of six years. Five nights later Mr. Brozel impersonated Radames in Verdi's Aida, and on both occasions showed that he had profited greatly by his experience at Continental opera-houses. The other principal artists were Madame Fanny Moody, Madame de Vere-Sapio, and Messrs. Lewys James, William Dever, Seth Hughes, Charles Carter, Charles Magrath and Charles Manners. Miss Maude Louise Roger, who made her début as Ortrud on the first night, gave promise of becoming of advantage to the company, and the other artists evinced much ability. The repertoire consists of Lohengrin, Tannhauser, Tristan and Isolde, Madama Butterfly, Aida, Il Trovatore, Faust, and the inevitable combination of Cavalleria Rusticana and Pagliacci. As usual, the excellence of the chorus-singing is one of the most pleasing features of the company, and a well-formed orchestra is ably conducted by Messrs. Eckhold and Sapio. Mr. Charles Manners and his accomplished wife deserve every encouragement for their efforts in the cause of operas in English.

Foreign Motes.

BUCAREST.

Xaver Scharwenka's fourth Pianoforte concerto, dedicated to the Queen of Roumania, is to be produced here in October with the composer as soloist.

DÜSSELDORF.

A tablet is to be affixed to the house in Eilkerstrasse where Clara and Robert Schumann lived for three years. From thence the great composer was taken to the Endenich Asylum, near Bonn, where he so sadly ended his days in 1856.

FLORENCE.

A number of valuable autographs—by Wagner, Verdi, Gounod, and others—have been presented to the Musical Academy of this city by the sister of the composer, the late Frederigo Consolo.

FRANKFORT-ON-MAIN.

The concerts of the Museum Society during the winter season will be under the direction of the distinguished Amsterdam conductor, Willem Mengelberg.

HAMBURG.

Georg Schumann's biblical oratorio 'Ruth' will be produced in December by the Singakademie, under the direction of Professor B. Barth.—The first novelty of the coming season at the Stadttheater will be Leo Blech's one-act comic opera 'Versiegelt.' The principal rôles will be taken by Frau Metzger-Froitzheim and Herr Lohfing, and the work will be given under the direction of Capell-

LIEGE.

André Ernest Modeste Grétry was born in this city on ebruary 8, 1741. Acting upon the advice of Voltaire, February 8, 1741. whom he met at Ferney, he went to Paris, where he successfully produced many works for the stage. He died l'Ermitage,' near Montmorency, where Rousseau once resided, and his heart was transported to his native city. The eightieth anniversary of that event was celebrated here last month, which included a special performance of the opera 'Richard Cœur de Lion,' a work which is generally regarded as the finest which Gretry wrote for the stage.

The well-known French conductor, Edouard Colonne, celebrated, on July 23, the seventieth anniversary of his birth. He founded the Colonne Orchestra in 1873. M. Colonne is always a welcome visitor at Queen's Hall, where he will take Mr. Henry J. Wood's place while the latter is conducting the Sheffield Festival.

WILDUNGEN.

Nicolai, who is now only remembered by his 'Merry wives of Windsor,' wrote a Symphony in D which was produced at Vienna in 1845. The score of the work has been recently discovered among the archives of the Gewandhaus.

Mr. Carl Weber, one of the viola players at the Wagner Festival, Royal Albert Hall, in 1877, writes in reference to the obituary notice of Mr. Carl Deichmann, which appeared in our August issue (p. 530): 'Deichmann was principal of the second violins, the leader's desk being shared by August Wilhelmj and Hermann Franke, the originator of the Wagner Festival of 1877. Moreover, Deichmann was the interpreter on that eventful occasion, as neither Wagner nor Hans Richter could speak any English. It was due to his tact and inborn courtesy that he most admirably discharged that important duty.'

Mr. Oscar Pollack, the doyen of musical critics in the Midlands, was entertained at dinner at the Acorn Hotel, Birmingham, on July 27, in celebration of his seventieth birthday, when he was presented with a handsome cheque subscribed for by a number of friends. In the course of the evening Mr. Percy Harrison alluded to the fact that Mr. Pollack commenced his musical career in that town as assistant to the late Mr. Thomas Harrison, and produced the programme of a concert arranged by him (Mr. Pollack) and given at Dee's Hotel fifty-four years ago.

In connection with the recent Dover Pageant, Mr. H. J. Taylor, Master of the music, has been the recipient of several presents from the performers, including a handsome dressing case from the madrigal chorus, a framed photograph of the complete orchestra from members of the band, the 'hood' of the Royal College of Organists from the 'Spinning' chorus, and a silver cigar-case, suitably inscribed, from the 'Narrative' chorus. Mr. Wilfred Barclay, chief of the 'Narrative' chorus, was the recipient from the members of a large framed photograph of that body of singers.

The volume of harpsichord music, in manuscript, by Alessandro Scarlatti, exhibited at the Exhibition of the Musicians' Company, is about to be published by Messrs. Bach & Co., under the editorship of Mr. J. S. Shedlock. Scarlatti's biographer, Mr. E. J. Dent, considers that this is the most important and authoritative manuscript that he has seen of that eminent composer's.

The fiftieth anniversary of the death of Edward Bache was commemorated at Birmingham Cathedral on Sunday, August 23, when Mr. Royle Shaw played a selection of music composed by that gifted son of Birmingham, whose promising career was cut short at the early age of twenty-five.

Answers to Correspondents.

HULMBIAN.—For your lecture on Church Music, consult the histories of music by Hawkins and Burney; Curwen's 'Studies in Worship Music' (1st series); the writings of Canon Overton (for old English psalmody, &c.); and various articles in Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians.'

Articles on the history of the Anglican pointed Psalter appeared in this journal in the issues of March, April, June and July, 1903. Mr. John S. Bumpus has, we believe, a book in the press which treats of the subject generally, which will doubtless be found useful.

FLAUTO TRAVERSO.—(1) An illustrated article on Wells Cathedral appeared in our issue of December, 1902. Manchester will probably appear next month, and Wakefield and Southwell will follow in due course. At present Liverpool has not a cathedral worthy of the city, but, as you know, a magnificent edifice is now in course of erection. (2) Messrs. Bell's books on English Cathedrals are published at 1s. 6d. each, and you will find a list at the end of each volume.

E. M. C.—Yes, Messrs. Bell publish a book on the Temple Church in their Cathedral series. In addition to the biographical sketch of Dr. Walford Davies (to which you refer), you might consult a similar article on the late Dr. E. J. Hopkins which appeared in our issue of September, 1897. There you will find some particulars of the famous organ erected by Father Smith, with some illustrations concerning it.

H. C. L.—There seems to be reason in your contention that, in Beethoven's Pianoforte sonata in A flat (Op. 26), the pedal should be raised at the beginning of the penultimate bar of the last movement and then immediately depressed, thus leaving only the last (bass) note sounding, but whether an examiner would quibble at such a termination of the sonata is more than we dare to say.

A. E.—Some or all of the following pieces for four violins may meet your requirements: Quatuor (Dont) 5s.; Capriccio Fugato, Op. 103 (Hiller), 3s.; Three pieces (a) Menuett, (b) Wiegenlied, (c) Barcarole, Op. 5 (Kleinecke), each 1s. 6d.; Adagio (Ludwig), 1s. 6d.; and Four pieces (J. And in answer to the question 'Is it absolutely necessary to have had any previous experience?' we venture to submit an affirmative reply, unless you wanted to lose your money.

A. C. V.—(1) For a syllabus of the Royal College of Organists' examinations write to the honorary secretary of the College, at Kensington Gore, S.W. (2) You could not do better than study the eight short and easy preludes and fugues of Bach.

H. G.—With regard to the value of your old violin, we can only repeat what has often been said in this column submit the instrument to Messrs. W. E. Hill & Sons, 140, New Bond Street, who, in return for a fee, will give you an estimate of its worth.

J. S.—We believe that Fellows of the Royal College of Organists are entitled to wear a hood. You had better apply to the College authorities for full information on this point as, so far as we can discover, no mention is made thereof in the Calendar.

P. W. H. Q.—Your best plan will be to write to Mr. Courtice Pounds, and ask him for the title and composer of the song which took your fancy. A letter would reach him addressed to the Savage Club, Adelphi Terrace, Strand.

M. O'M.—Why not try for one of the scholarships at the Royal Academy of Music or the Royal College of Music? Beware of unscrupulous persons who, in offering you a tempting bait, only want your money.

H. B.—The stereo. plates of Macfarren's edition of the Messiah have been acquired by Messrs. Novello, and as at present there is no intention of reprinting the work, copies are not obtainable.

"The inspiration of a highly-refined musician. . . . The Cantata is even a more masterly and beautiful work than 'The Holy City."

—Huddersfield Examiner.

"No more charming Cantata than 'Joan of Arc' could have been chosen. It abounds in delicious music. There is not a tedious note in it."—Newcastle-on-Tyne Daily Chronicle.

"Gives the listener a vivid and realistic impression, its attractiveness being continuous instead of spasmodic."—Bradford Observer.

SELECTED LIST OF CHORAL WORKS

FOR PERFORMANCE AT CENTENARY CONCERTS, Etc.

ST. PAUL

English version by WILLIAM BALL.

Mendelssohn was so devoted a disciple and so earnest a propagandist of Bach that it causes no surprise he should model his first oratorio, "St. Paul," on the masterpiece of his illustrious countryman. This is specially noticeable in the noble use of the chorale by the great Cantor, whose example the younger master followed with equal success. "St. Paul" was produced on Whitsunday, May 22, 1836, at the Lower Rhine Musical Festival, held at Düsseldorf, the composer, then in his twenty-eighth year, conducting the performance. In England the oratorio obtained its first hearing at the Liverpool Musical Festival, October 7, 1836. This performance, given in St. Peter's Church (now the temporary Catheir all Liverpool), was conducted by Sir George Smart. "St. Paul" was the first choral work of Mendelssohn's issued in England, J. Alfred Novello being the publisher.

ELIJAH

English version by WILLIAM BARTHOLOMEW.

This, Mendelssohn's second oratorio, is invested with a two-fold interest: it reveals him in the maturity of his powers, and it was produced at an English Festival, the Birmingham Musical Festival of 1846 (August 26), and under the baton of the composer. After undergoing a rigorous revision, the work was performed in the following Spring (1847), four times in London (by the Sacred Harmonic Society), once at Manchester, and once at Birmingham, all six performances being conducted by Mendelssohn. On November 4 of the same year, at the age of thirty-eight, his music-loving soul was calmed in death.

HYMN OF PRAISE (LOBGESANG). English version by J. ALFRED NOVELLO.

English version by J. ALFRED NOVELLO.

Having taken Bach as his model for "St. Paul," what more natural than that Mendelssohn should go to Beethoven for the plan of this festive work? The Choral Symphony of the Vienna master suggested the form of the "Hymn of Praise," composed by Mendelssohn to celebrate the four-hundredth anniversary of Gutenberg's invention of printing. This Symphonic-cantata was first performed in the Church of St. Thomas, Leipzig, the scene of Bach's labours, on June 25, 1840, and in England at the Birmingham Musical Festival of the same year, both performances being given under the composer's direction. Like "Elijah," the "Hymn of Praise" underwent serious revision, the well-known "Watchman" scene being an afterthought which came to the mind of Mendelssohn during a sleepless night.

CHRISTUS

English version by WILLIAM BARTHOLOMEW.

An unfinished oratorio, intended by Mendelssohn to form the third of a trilogy with "St. Paul" and "Elijah," and upon which he was engaged up to the time of his death. The eight completed numbers, published posthumously, were first performed at the Birmingham Musical Festival, September 8, 1852.

ATHALIE

Music to Racine's Tragedy, with recitation for Concert use.

Originally composed in 1843, for female chorus with pianoforte accompaniment, "Athalie" underwent various changes. During his sixth visit to London, Mendelssohn composed the Overture and March, and early in the following year he re-wrote the choruses, casting them in four parts, and scored the work for orchestra. After having been first performed in Berlin—December 1, 1845—it obtained its first hearing in England at Windsor Castle, on New Year's Day, 1847, when it was sung in the original French version. At the request of the Prince Consort, Mendelssohn sent a copy of the score, with an autograph inscription in French, to Queen Victoria specially for this royal performance. In its English version by William Bartholomew, "Athalie was first performed in this country by the Philharmonic Society, at the Hanover Square Rooms, March 12, 1849.

Half-programme work. Soloists required: two Sopranos and one Contralto, also a Reciter: the recitation portion is, however, sometimes omitted in performance.

A Sacred Cantata. English version by W. BARTHOLOMEW.

Composed by Mendelsson, to Latin words, in 1846, the "Elijah" year, and produced at St. Martin's Church, Liège, on the Feast of Corpus Christi, June 11. The work, in its English version, received its first performance in this country at St. Martin's Hall, Long Acre, on December 21, 1848, at one of the concerts given and conducted by John Hullah.

FESTGESANG (HYMNS OF PRAISE).

FESTGESANG (HYMNS OF PRAISE).

As a complement to the "Hymn of Praise" (Lobgesang) the four pieces forming the "Festgesang" were first performed in the open Market Place, Leipzig, on June 24, 1840, in connection with the Gutenberg festival. In their original form they are for male-voice chorus with accompaniment of brass instruments, but at the request of his English publisher, Mendelssohn arranged them for mixed voices. In a letter dated "Leipzig, 30 April, 1843," written to Mr. E. Buxton (Ewer & Co.), Mendelssohn says (in English): "You will receive with these lines the copy of my 'Festgesang' in which I have made a few remarks in those passages in which Mr. Bartholomew has two different versions, and also the arrangement of the whole for a chorus with female voices. I think it will do well in this shape and have no objection to your publishing it. As I am to fix a price I would say four guineas.

. . I should not like the accompaniment to be called pianoforte or organ, as if it had been originally intended for those instruments; but if you should like to say 'adapted for pianoforte or organ by the composer you are very welcome to do so, as it is the truth. The same you my say about the arrangement for [which includes] sooprano and alto. I only would wish to have on the title some allusion to the original shape, at least nothing which goes against it."

Part of the music of the second of these four pieces is well-known through its adaptation, by Dr. W. H. Cummings, to Charles Wesley's Christmas Hymn" Hark: the herald angels sing, which first appeared in a cheap form in The Musical Times of November, 1867 (No. 297). In the above-quoted letter Mendelssohn says, in reference to the English words of No. 2: "If the right ones are hit at, I am sure that piece will be liked very well by the singers and the hearers—but it will mever do to sacred words. There must be a national and merry subject found out, something to which the soldierlike and buxom motion of the piece has some relation, and the words must express so

THE FIRST WALPURGIS NIGHT

The English version from Goethe's Poem, by WILLIAM BARTHOLOMEW.

WILLIAM BARTHOLOMEW.

Goethe's famous poem appealed with strong force to Mendelssohn's dramatic instinct, of which the vigorous chorus "Come with torches" is a sufficient proof. Produced at Berlin in January, 1833, the "Walpurgis Night" was afterwards re-scored. Its first public performance in England was by the Philharmonic Society, at the Hanover Square Rooms, July 8, 1844, the composer conducting. A private performance of the work had, however, previously been given at John Hullah's house, June 14, 1844, Mendelssohn being one of the guests on that interesting occasion.

HEAR MY PRAYER

Soprano Solo, Chorus and Organ (or Orchestra).

Specially composed for some concerts given by Miss Mounsey (afterwards Mrs. Bartholomew), at Crosby Hall, and first performed there on January 8, 1845. Mendelssohn afterwards orchestrated the accompaniment at the request of the late Mr. Joseph Robinson, of Dublin. In this form the work was first heard at Dublin, on December 21, 1848, Mr. Robinson conducting.

MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM

Incidental Music to Shakespeare's play (Female voices).
The overture, composed by Mendelssohn at the age of seventeen, was the work which first made him famous. First performed in public at Stettin, in February, 1827, Mendelssohn brought the score with him to London in 1820, his first visit to England, and himself conducted the earliest performance of it here on Midsummer night, 1820, at the Argyll Rooms, Regent Street. The remaining music—Scherzo, Notturno, Wedding March, and the vocal numbers—was not composed until 1843. The complete work was first performed at Potsdam, on October 14, 1843, and in England, under the composer's direction, at the Philiharmonic Society's Concert, Hanover Square Rooms, May 27, 1844.

LORELEY

An unfinished Opera.

An opera which, like the oratorio "Christus," Mendelssohn was engaged upon at the time of his death. The published numbers consist of a Finale (performed at the Birmingham Musical Festival, September 8, 1832, to Bartholomew's English Version); an Ave Maria, for soprano solo and female chorus; and a Vintagers' Chorus, for men's voices.

These Pianoforte Studies have been highly praised by M. VLADIMIR DE PACHMANN, who has expressed his intention of playing some of them during his Recital Tour in the United States. His testimonial is published with the Work, which consists of Twelve Numbers, specially designed to develop power and skill in the fourth and fifth fingers. The importance of trying to equalize these weaker fingers with the stronger ones is unquestionable, as defective execution is more often traceable to this inequality of the fingers than to any other cause. other cause.

PIANOFORTE PLAYING

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful-to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of progress.

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et catera.

STUDIES PROGRESSIVE

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

TAYLOR.

This Collection of Studies is intended to illustrate the various elements of a complete course of pianoforte technique, and to provide students with the means of attacking and overcoming the different special difficulties which have to be encountered. With this view, the Studies have been arranged in groups, those in each group being placed in progressive order, and having reference to some one particular difficulty. The greater part of the studies themselves have been selected from the standard works of the most eminent Study-writers, and with these are included numerous others, which, though of equally great practical utility, have hitherto been less generally accessible.

FIFTY-SIX BOOKS, PRICE ONE SHILLING EACH.

FROM THE ABOVE:

SELECTED PIANOFORTE STUDIES

PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

IN TWO SETS (EIGHT BOOKS), PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH BOOK.

THE present collection of studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most beneficial.

beneficial.

The Studies are grouped in two Sets, and are so arranged that the different Books in which they are contained may be taken in consecutive order, but pupils who are already further advanced than the elementary stage represented by Set I. may commence at once with Set II., which will be found to be complete in itself, and to illustrate all the essential elements of technique.

Where additional studies are desired, or studies on certain subjects which are not touched upon in this series, the larger collection, published under the title of "Progressive Studies" (from which the present examples have been selected), is of course available.

The

(COMMENCED AUGUST, 1908.)

UNDER this head it is proposed to deal with festivals of the competitive type, and generally to serve the interests of the competitive festival movement which has now become an important factor in the musical development of the nation. We hope to be of service to the promoters of festivals in providing expert advice as to the best means of overcoming the numerous difficulties that arise in connection with the inception and carrying out of schemes. Communications are invited from secretaries and others who may desire to discuss points of general interest, and we shall be glad to receive printed reports of festival proceedings.

CREWE. AUGUST 8.

A successful competition for mixed choirs of from forty to fifty voices was held in connection with the Crewe Memorial Cottage Hospital Fête on the above date. The test-piece was "By Babylon's wave" (Gounod), and a first-prize of £20 and a second of £5 were offered. Six choirs entered, and sang in the following order:

Marks. (Max. 100.) Mossley Vocal Society (Mr. John Shaw) ...
2nd. Talke & District Prize Choir (Mr. J. Whewall)
Berwyn Glee Party, Liverpool (Mr. E. Dodd) 80 89 73 At the conclusion of the competition, Mr. E. Hurren

Harding, of Bangor, who adjudicated, conducted an effective massed performance of the test-piece by the competing choirs.

The competition took place on a large covered stage in the open air, and was an innovation in connection with the fete, which was very popular and most interesting. A drawback was the delays caused by the bands playing in the huge procession, which passed through the town and arrived at the park whilst the competition was on. The singing had to be stopped until all the bands had played.

The choral secretary was Mr. H. J. Smith, and he and the other officials are to be congratulated on the success of their first competition, which it is hoped will be a feature of succeeding fêtes at Crewe.

NATIONAL CO-OPERATIVE FESTIVAL

CRYSTAL PALACE, August 22.

THE competitions at this year's gathering constitute, we believe, a record in regard to Crystal Palace Festivals. Nineteen junior and fifteen adult choirs had entered, and every one of them sang. As will be seen below, the choirs came from many parts of the country.

There were four sections, two for the junior and two for the adults, differentiated by the number of voices allowed. In each class, test-pieces from the programme of the great concerts given by combined choirs were selected, and each choir sang a piece of its own choice. The first-prizes were all challenge shields, a small sum or music to the conductors, and certificates to the Second-prizes were small sums of money from half-a-guinea to three guineas. The following is a list of choirs, pieces, and of results:

JUNIOR CHOIRS, 20 to 30 voices.

Set-test: (a) "I love all things" (Pinsuti).* (b) Own-choice piece. Max. Marks-80 80 = 160 (a) (b) Total. East Grinstead (Mr. C. S. Jelks), "O sing to me a spring song" (Ashworth)†

3rd. Croydon (Miss B. L. Turley), "A lullaby" (Roeckel)*

2nd. Willesden (Mr. F. Clark), "The brook" (Challinor)*

West London Kennel Big (Mr. V. 65 133 134 Wilesden (Mr. J. Martin)

West London, Kensal Rise (Mr. J. Martin),

"Fairy Barque" (Moffat)†

Maidenhead (Mr. L. Rockley), "The dawn of spring" (Mendelssohn)†

1st. Rochester (Mr. F. W. Ralph), "Winds gently whisper" (Whittaker)†

* Two-part. † Three-part. 136 132

The Dover Choir (Mr. G. Ross) also sang and gained (a) 70, and (b) 68 = 138 marks, but owing, unfortunately, to the accident of their having more than thirty singers on the platform they were regretfully disqualified. Their own test-piece was "Come to me, gentle sleep" (Schartau). It was a condition in every class that "ownchoice" pieces were to be unaccompanied. This regulation was a real hardship in the small-choir class. Unaccom-three-part pieces are too much for limited resources. Two-part songs composed with an indispensable accompaniment at best could make an appeal more as exhibitions of capacity than as musical effect. Rochester sang both pieces admirably and Dover did almost as well. chief fault of the performances was a too laboured rhythm. The attack and enunciation were excellent in nearly all

Luton had to be disqualified because more than forty children were on the platform. The remarks made above as to the choice of two-part music without accompaniment apply also to some of the foregoing pieces. The singing generally was very good. There was some flattening; so much as a minor third was in one or two cases lost in the long test-piece "Winds gently whited was a flow available."

exhibited were often excellent.

Penge displayed capital tone and the mark of good training, but the loss of pitch in (a) led to altos singing vaguely. In their own piece they sang very tunefully and tastefully. Woolwich sang (a) with beautiful effect and correctly conceived expression, but lost pitch, and (b) was sung with much charm of tone and treatment. Erith showed refinement in (a), but the altos were uncertain and the tone thin. In (b) the attack and enunciation were good points. St. Clements was the enunciation were good points. St. Clements was the only boys' choir. In (a) their good production was evident, and their performance generally showed skilful training. The alto part was remarkably full for such young boys. In (b) there was some brilliant execution, although the attack sometimes straggled. Wealdstone has something to learn as to unity of attack and enunciation, but their tone was sweet and blendful. The (a) piece was too slow, and in (b) the rhythm was not well treated. Gravesend secured some refined expression in (a), but the tone was mixed (there were some rather old "juniors" in the choir). In (b) the rhythm was too languid and the expression lacked sincerity. Very careful attention to details was obvious. Luton gave an excellent performance of (a). The voices blended beautifully, and the expression was not overdone. The rhythm was scarcely ideal. In (b) there was thrilling ring of clear tone and the execution was pleasantly fluent. An over-eagerness near the end led to some roughness. Faversham did very well for a young choir. The alto part in (a) was sometimes wrong, one or two voices deviating into the treble part an octave lower. They sang (b) capitally, although too slowly. The difficult key-changes were very well done, and altogether their performance exhibited good training and natural capacity. Peterborough displayed excellent vocalization and a compact blend of sweet tone. There was much to admire in (a) even though the rhythm was not a strong feature, and (b), although quite charming as tone, was again not interesting as rhythm. Portsmouth sang with beautiful finish. The vowels were well defined and the pace and treatment in (a) showed good taste and judgment. If they had not lost pitch their performance in this trio would have been rated even more highly than it was. panied unison and two-part pieces are not attractive, and The execution of (b) was a fine example of training.

The "Heigh, ho" movement would have been better taken faster, and the "Freeze" movement slower and more expressively. But the merits of the singing were obvious. Cwmbach sang after a long journey and a tedious wait at the Palace. These circumstances might tempt an adjudicator to extend special consideration, but this would risk an avalanche. So with every desire to encourage this well-equipped choir, it had to be placed strictly on its merits. In (a), which they sang second, there were too many forcible accents and some wrong There was great virility in the performance, and the altos were the fullest and best of all the choirs. The "Lullaby," although flicely sung in some respects, was again too pointed in accent and not suave enough.

ADULT CHOIRS, 30 to 40 voices. Set-piece: (a) "The mother's lamentation" (Irish air, arranged by T. F. Dunhill.) (b) Own-choice piece.

Portsmouth was weak in bass resonance, and lacked unity of attack and of vowel colour. They displayed some good capacity and drill, but they needed more sincere expression. Rugby caught some of the pathos of (a), but expression. Rugoy caught some of the pathos of (a), but the rhythmic attack lacked finish. In (b) they showed greater sympathy and fluency. The sopranos sang rather sharp, and the pianos would have been better if softer. Birmingham began (a) in the wrong key and had to start again. The choir apparently has not had experience. The sopranos and altos did very well, but the tenors and basses were very incorrect in the set-test. In (b) there was effective expression, but the pace was too slow and the rhythm sluggish. Faversham is a welldisciplined choir. The tone is agreeable, and the balance fair; the alto part lacks resonance. In (a) the attack was excellent, but the rhythm generally was not well defined. In (b) the delicacies of alto tone again provided rich blend; some of the expression was highly picturesque. Sheerness sang both pieces from memory, and secured conspicuous unity. There was an attractive rhythmic flow in (a), and the expression was distinguished by moving sincerity. In the well-known show-piece (b) there was much to admire in the choral technique, even though the releases were open to criticism. There was welcome absence of exaggeration in the relations of force. Grimsby needs to cultivate a more exact tonal attack, free from curved approach, and to acquire a finer rhythmic sensitiveness. In (b) there was much to praise. Some singers, tenors chiefly, allowed themselves to sing roughly in this fine glee. On the whole the performance was full-blooded rather than refined. Penge sang (a) from memory. sopranos and altos sang nicely, but there were inequalities in the tone and some uncertainties in the attack. The "Three fishers" was finely sung. There was high colour and dramatic expression. Occasional curved tonal attack marred some passages and the intonation occasionally gave way. Enfield began (a) with too much restraint, the attack being diffident, but some delicate expression caught the attention. In (b) they were at first not in tune. The basses were hesitant, and the attack all round was sometimes ragged. The expression was careful and effective.

ADULT CHOIRS, 50 to 60 voices. Set-piece: "Strike the lyre" (T. Cooke).

Reading is a well-organized choir. The attack in (a) was clean and the execution finished. The tenors were weak in intonation. The last movement was sung with rare spirit. In (b) the blend was sweet, but the rhythm lacked grace of accent. The sopranos were brilliant, and were an effective factor in the climax. Woolwich sang (a) with point and precision, and the tone was very agreeable. The basses were excellent at the final climax. A big, resonant tone was developed in (b), although the inner parts were weak in the balance. The tenors have a too "chesty" tone. The warmth of the expression and the fine technique of the choir were noticeable features. Peterborough sang (a) slowly, but the effect was broad and dignified because of the sonority of the tone. Some of the tenderness of the middle movement was missed, but the well measured out execution of the Allegro was impressive as resonant musical tone. This choir attempted a noble but very difficult "own-choice" piece. Only the best equipped choirs can hope to conquer the technical difficulties of a Cornelius part-song. It says much for the Peterborough choralists and their able conductor that they came so near to realization of the touching beauty of this piece. It was not perfectly done, and the proper relations of the crotchet time to the minim time were not observed. But there were some deeply impressive moments in the imposing climaxes. The speciality moments in the imposing climaxes. of Coventry was an exceptionally smooth blend and unity. The execution had that liquidity which gives delight to the ear. The choir would have even finer sonority if the altos were richer. The treatment of (a) exhibited great skill and (b) was even more finely done. The climaxes had due warmth without exaggerations of force, and the high finish of the execution was coupled with moving sincerity of expression. Long Eaton is a well-drilled choir, responsive and plastic. In (a) there was much finish and good technique. The tenors did not control their voices in the last movement. In (b) the interpretation was broad and sonorous. The softer parts might with advantage have been softer. Gloucester secured a dainty rhythmic accent in (a), and the basses displayed a fine, rotund tone. The leading feature was massiveness rather than delicacy. The (b) piece was sung rather quickly, but with effective smoothness. The intonation was not always true and the pitch fell a tone. Mile-End was good as to tone in (a), but for some time the execution lacked freedom. The tenors were excellent, and the climaxes were well wrought up. The last movement was taken at a sober pace and was sung with great spirit. In (b) the opening pace was too slow for the definition of the rhythm. The effect was grave and the execution refined. The stormy Allegro was exciting, although hardly so vivid as it can be. The return to a tempo was again slow, and at the ensuing Lento the pace was not altered. But notwithstanding these points the interpretation had much interest.

THE BLACKPOOL FESTIVAL.

OCTOBER 14, 15, 16, 17.

The programme of this important event presents many The syllabus is a substantial attractive features. pamphlet of thirty-seven pages, and affords ample evidence of the care and high aims of the promoters of the scheme. Fifty-four pieces by forty composers are named as tests. There are madrigals, part-songs and vocal solos by composers of the first rank, including the "ancients," Gibbons, Orlando di Lasso, and Purcell; and the "moderns" Brahms, Weingartner, Macdowell and Elgar. Mr. Havergal Brian has written two pieces specially for the festival. The following is an outline of the proceedings:

Wednesday, October 14.—Children's day and local female-voice, male-voice and church choirs. Evening concert, at which action-songs (a remarkable feature) will be performed.

Thursday, October 15. — Open vocal quartets and quintets, vocal soloists (in eight classes), local femalevoice choirs and string orchestras. Evening concert, at which the final competitions will take place.

Friday, October 16.—Junior soloists, instrumental and vocal, action-songs and Maypole dance.

Evening concert by the recently constituted Festival Chorus of 160 voices. The following are among the works to be performed:

"Sing ye to the Lord" Bach. C. Lee Williams. Festival Hymn · Folk-song variations .. Rutland Boughton. • •

Saturday, October 17.—This is the "open" day, on which choirs come from distant parts. The tests are severe. Mixed-voice choirs compete in two sections, and the male-voice choirs are also in two sections. There are also classes for string and for full orchestras. In the chief class for mixed voices the tests are:

Madrigal "Love me not for comely grace" Wilbye. Motet "Fest und Gedenksprücke Brahms.

(Op. 109, No. 1.)
"Two roses" Part-song .. "O wild west wind" Part-song .. Elgar.

The last-named piece is one of the finest efforts of its composer. It was written at Rome in the early part of the present year. The words are by Shelley.

The proceedings will close with a concert given by the winning choirs and orchestras, and the final competitions of the selected choirs and bands. The adjudicators are to be Dr. McNaught, Mr. Landon Ronald, Mr. Allen Gill, Mr. Harry Evans, Mr. Paul le Vallon, Madame Edith Hands, Mr. C. H. Fogg and Mr. W. McNaught.

WELSH EISTEDDFODAU.

CARMARTHEN, August 3.

This event attracted a large attendance. In the juvenile choir section there were nine entries. The Young Volunteers from Tally (Mr. T. Evans) won the first place. The Whitland Ladies (Mr. T. Davies) won the first place in their class, and Swansea was victorious in the male choir section, the test again being "The King of worlds."

In the chief mixed-voice choir class the Myddin Society (Mr. W. Jones) was first. The test was "He, watching

Dr. Coward adjudicated. over Israel.''

CARDIFF SEMI-NATIONAL, August 3, 4.

There were numerous entries in the eight classes of the musical competitions. In the chief choral class the tests were "Come with torches" (Mendelssohn) and "My love dwells" (Elgar). Three choirs entered, and the first place fell to the London Welsh Choir (Mr. Merlin Morgan). Seven choirs sang in the second class, in which the test (for how many hundreds of times before?) was "See what love" (Mendelssohn). Briton Ferry (Mr. Evan Morris) was the winner.

On the second day the chief event was the male-voice choir section, in which there were nine entries. Swansea (Mr. L. R. Bowen) gained the first place, after an exciting contest. The test was "The King of worlds" (A. Dard-Janin). Nine juvenile choirs sang, and the first-prize was divided between Ogmore Vale (Mr. W. H. Caple) and Hafod (Mr. Ben Thomas); and the second-prize between Seion (Mr. W. C. Jenkins) and Romilly (Mr. W. M. Williams). The adjudicators were Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, Mr. D. Emlyn Evans and Dr. Rogers.

MID-RHONDDA, August 4.

The chief event here was the male-voice choir competition. The test-piece was the same as for Cardiff, and Swansea here also gained the first place, singing first at Mid-Rhondda and hurrying off to Cardiff. Mr. George Riseley adjudicated.

NEWCASTLE-EMLYN, SOUTH WALES, August 5.

This was a typical local Welsh Eisteddfod held in a charming countryside district. Newcastle-Emlyn is the terminus of a branch of the Great Western Railway, and is served only by a single line for many miles. This being so, it was remarkable that from eight to ten thousand people flocked to the event. There was no time-table. It was mainly a case of catch if you can the choirs and soloists. No blame can be attached to the officials, for obviously they had no control over the train service. But although the time at which any section of the competition would be heard was gloriously uncertain, the good temper exhibited was remarkable. Much of this happiness arose from the good-humoured sallies of the Rev. Dr. Gomer Lewis, the "conductor," or, as we should say in England, the "director" of the proceedings. Dr. Lewis is a pastmaster in the art of governing Welsh crowds. The musical part of the Eisteddfod included sections for (a) large choirs, (b) small choirs, (c) children's choirs, (d) male-voice choirs, (e) soloists, and a final concert at which Madame Albani sang.

In the (a) section four choirs, each of nearly 200 voices, each sang Mendelssohn's "Not only unto Him," with the result that Rhymney (Mr. John Price) won the £100 prize. Their performance was distinguished by fine tone and treatment, and artistic restraint. Pontypridd (Mr. W. Jones) won the small-choir prize, Bargoed Teify (Mr. T. Luke) that for male-voice choirs, and the Waunarlwydd Juveniles that for the children's choirs. The winning juvenies that for the children's choirs. The winning soloists were: Soprano, Miss Edith Jones (Landore); Contralto, Miss Rachel Jones (Ammanford); Baritone, Mr. W. D. Davies (Penygroes); Tenor, Mr. James Phillips (Cardiff). Miss Lilly Morgan won the pianoforte-playing prize. The adjudicators were Mr. D. Emlyn Evans and Dr. W. G. McNaught.

THE NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD OF WALES.

LONDON, June 15, 16, 17, 18, 1909.

As announced in our last issue, this great event will be held in London next year. There is every prospect of the gathering being of exceptional importance. For one thing, the London Committee has had the courage to set pieces of a modern type, instead of depending upon well-worn selections.

It should be well understood that all the musical competitions, except those in the instrumental section, are not confined to Welsh performers, but are open to the whole world. The opportunity provided for the choirs of the whole country is therefore unique. The adjudiof the whole country is therefore unique. The adjudicators are to be Sir Charles Villiers Stanford, Mus. Doc.; Dr. W. G. McNaught; Mr. D. Emlyn Evans, Mr. Dan Price, and Mr. Harry Evans. For Secretaries, see page 73. The following are the tests in the chief classes:

Chief Choral, 160 to 200 voices.

"Come, ye daughters" ("St. Matthew" Passion music) ... Bach.
"Rest, soldier, rest" ... J. H. Roberts.
"The tempest" Correlius First-prize, £150. Second-prize, £50.

Second Choral, 75 to 100 voices.
"O snatch me swift"
"The Lord is my Shepherd"
First-prize, £50. Second-prize, £10. Dr. Callcott. Harry Evans.

Madrigal, 30 to 40 voices.
"The Lady Oriana" Wilbye. Prize, £15.

Other information and an article on "Experiences of a Girls' Club in competitions," by Miss Ashworth, will be in The School Music Review edition of The Competition Record.

MUSIC AND MIRACLES.

A miracle is that which appears to defy the Laws of Nature. Possession of perfect touch and technique in piano playing has hitherto been so rare as almost to be accounted miraculous. The discovery of a new law often brings miracles down to the realms of science, however; and the discovery by Mr. Macdonald Smith of the law governing muscular control has done this for piano playing. His System "From Brain to Keyboard" is merely scientific, just as wireless telegraphy is, although pupils frequently describe results as "miraculous." Pianoforte Playing," sent free by Mr. M. Macdonald Smith, 19, Bloomsbury Square, W.C., describes the principles on which his well-known System, already taught to over 3,000 pianists of every degree of proficiency, in all parts of the world, is based.

MANCHESTER CATHEDRAL.

Mancrestre is the fairest, best builded, quikkest, and most populus Toune of al Lancastreshirc. Yet hit is but one Paroch Chirch, but is a College and almost thoroughowt doble ilyd ex quadrato lapide durissimo.

> JOHN LELAND, the 'King's antiquary,' in his 'Itinerary,' c. 1535.

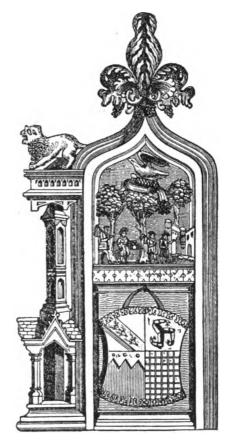

Parish Church, Collegiate Church, Cathedral. Such, in brief, is the history of the mother-church of the diocese of Manchester. The origin of the church is lost in the mists of antiquity. There are certain remains of an Anglo-Saxon building dating at latest from the beginning of the 7th century; indeed, the late Mr. J. S. Crowther, architect to the cathedral, discovered fragments of three churches anterior to the present beautiful edifice. It may serve the present purpose, however, to begin our survey when the church became collegiate. That was in the year 1422, when Henry V. granted a charter to Thomas, Lord de la Warre, Rector of Manchester and Lord of the Manor 'Ecclesiam de Mancestre in ecclesiam collegeatam erigere.' From that date the title of rector was exchanged for that of warden, an unbroken list of rectors going back to the year 1261. The college, which originally (in 1422) consisted of a warden, eight fellows in priests' orders, four deacons, and six boy choristers, was not suppressed in the reign of Henry VIII.

In the first year of Edward VI. the college was dissolved and disendowed, and the lands and domestic buildings passed into the hands of the Stanleys. The lands were restored under Queen Mary, but the buildings, which now form the ancient portions of Chetham Hospital, remained with the Earl of Derby. In the middle of the 17th century they were described as 'Ye large building called ye College in Manchester, consisting of many rooms, with two barnes, one gate house, verie much decay'd, one parcell of ground formerly an orchard, and one garden, now in ye possession of Joseph Werden gent., who pays for ye same, for ye use of the Common wealth, ten pounds yearly. There is likewise one other room in ye said College reserved and made use of for publique meetings of X'sian conscientious people.

Humphrey Chetham, a worthy Manchester philanthropist (1580-1653), long had his eye upon this property in order to purchase it and endow an educational establishment for the board and education of poor boys, and to found a library. His benevolent proposal was matured in 1653, and to be specially noticed. the mediæval buildings of Chetham Hospital form one of the most interesting and historical features the panelling of the roof, in which are to be of Manchester. The library contains some 60,000 found some remains of that lost enamel called volumes; among the treasures there preserved is the autograph of John Byrom's well-known Christmas hymn, 'Christians, awake, salute the happy morn,' of which a facsimile was given in THE MUSICAL TIMES of December, 1902.

To return to the cathedral. Although one of the smallest cathedrals in England, it is by no means the least attractive in its architectural The oldest part is that of the choir, built by Sir John Huntingdon, the first warden, in 1422; his rebus is to be seen at the entrance to the Lady Chapel, the oldest part of the building, and a fine memorial brass to him (A.D. 1458) is in the floor of the Choir. As will be seen from the photograph on p. 631 the style is Perpendicular.

BENCH END IN THE CHOIR. (From S. Hibbert-Ware's ' History of the Foundations in Manchester.')

The glory of this part of the building is the elaborate tabernacle work, dating from the early part of the 16th century, which ranks among the finest to be seen anywhere. One remarkable and beautiful feature of the elaborately carved stalls is the level cornice above the canopies. The carving on the bench ends and misereres (see the illustration above and on p. 630) are features 'Delicate and intricate,' to quote Dr. Pyne, is

The entrance to the Chapter House is a very beautiful The Rood Screen—the lower piece of work. part ancient, the upper part by Sir Gilbert Scott on which the organ stands is an extremely beautiful and interesting feature in the church. Approached by two spiral staircases, it is of ample width on the top. Mr. Crowther used to affirm that it was not used entirely for the usual display of relics and Rood, but that it was used as the Radcliff and Derwentwater Chapel, an altar being placed on its lofty eminence. It has been said that on each side of the entrance to the Rood The fact is, the whole Screen was also an altar. cathedral was full of Guild and other chapels. There was also a chantry outside the south side of the choir—or rather parallel to the Jesus Chapel which chapel has disappeared, but it can be seen in some old prints.

Five chapels, including the Lady Chapel, are offshoots of the choir. One of these, the Derby Chapel, on the north side, is dedicated to St. John the Baptist; therein lies the Sir John Stanley of the well-known lines of Scott:

'Charge, Chester, charge! On, Stanley, on!' Were the last words of Marmion.

A MISERERE IN THE CHOIR.

(From J. S. Crowther's 'Architectural History of Manchester Cathedral.')

Leading from this is the Ely Chapel, which contains the remains of James Stanley, Bishop of Ely. As the Bishop died a married man, he was buried The chapel beyond the walls of the church. which bears the name of his diocese was erected by his son, Sir John Stanley, in 1515, the year of his father's death: thus the mortal remains of the prelate ultimately rested within the walls of the church! A fine monument to Humphrey Chetham, by Theed (1835), forms a prominent feature of the north aisle of the choir, as also dresses. does Father Smith's little organ, of which more anon.

If the choir is beautiful by reason of its elaborate wood-work, the nave is majestic on account of its great width. Built in 1465-68 by Warden Langley, the nave is wider than that of any other cathedral in England. In width 104 feet, it is five-aisled, due to the removal, in 1815, of the screens which part of the building, but no view can give the effect of the vista as seen from the great west door. The absence of a triforium is to some extent compensated for by the clerestory windows, which with other lights in the building are filled with good, modern stained glass. The church has been carefully restored, the Georgian excrescences the nave galleries and the cement casing of 1815 -having been removed. The tower was rebuilt in 1864, and the three porches are also 19th century additions. After having been collegiate for 425 years the church became a cathedral in 1847, when the diocese of Manchester, which formed part of Chester, was created; but in 1840, previous to the formation of the See, the title of warden of the collegiate church was changed to that of dean.

Before considering the musical associations per se of the cathedral, reference may be made to two important festivals which were held within these The first took place in 1828, and lasted three days, October 1 to 3. From a handsome volume-containing letters, programmes, and full information relating to this festival—in the Henry Watson Music Library (Manchester), we learn that the parochial organ was removed from the screen at the entrance to the choir and erected in a huge gallery, specially constructed for the performers, at the west end of the church. The organ was enlarged, and furnished with a new case 'of the largest size, corresponding in its carving with the style of the building, to which it is an appropriate ornament'! Another huge gallery, to accommodate the 'patrons' of the festival, was built over the screen nearly up to the roof of the choir, and at the opening service the prayers were intoned and the sermon preached from a pulpit placed at the west end of the nave. The 'conductor' was Mr. Greatorex, then organist of Westminster Abbey, 'who will preside at the organ,' so the programmes In order that Mr. Greatorex could accomplish that dual feat, the keyboards of the organ were brought out to the front of the gallery and connected with the instrument by a long tracker action. At two of the performances the programmes were miscellaneous. The only complete oratorio was the 'Messiah,' into which Catalani, the prima donna of the day, interpolated, —between 'His yoke is easy,' and 'Behold, the Lamb of God,'—the air 'Domine, labia mea'! One of the requests in the announcements reads thus: 'Ladies attending the performances are particularly requested not to wear large head-

The next festival—September 13 to 16, 1836 had a pathetic interest in the death of Madame Malibran, the chief singer on that occasion. As on the former occasion, the performers, 400 in number, were located at the west end of the church. Sir George Smart conducted, not with a baton, but 'who will preside at the pianoforte,' so the programmes record. Spohr's 'Christian's originally divided off the four chapels north and prayer' obtained its first performance at this south of the two aisles of the nave. The photograph festival on September 14, in which Clara Novello on p. 633 gives an idea of the grandeur of this then a girl of eighteen, took part. On that day, although she was very ill, Malibran sang 'Sing ye Handel's 'Dead March in Saul,' Psalms 39 and to the Lord' (Israel in Egypt) with thrilling effect, 90 (chanted), Greene's anthem 'Lord, let me this being the last sacred music uttered by that know mine end,' the choir occupying seats in glorious voice. Nine days later she died at the the organ gallery; and Handel's 'Holy, holy'

While it is impossible to say when an organ was first erected in Manchester Cathedral, we are enabled to refer to an instrument in the closing year of the 16th century. In the diary of Warden John Dee, the mathematician and astrologer, and under date July 3, 1600, is the following entry: 'The organs uppon condition was admitted,' which shows that the instrument was then regarded as a singular noun. We are told that on October 23, 1622, Warden Murray was brought before the Visitor of the College in consequence of 'the Quire or Chancell being farre out of repaires through his defaults,' and that 'Robert Leech and several others joyned with those that began to sing the Psalme before the Organes played, and singing in a contrary Tune to the Organes, causing a confusion on August 13 last, and Thomas Robinson was cited for saying that Ralph Lownde was damned for blowing the Organes'! Whatever admonition was made on that occasion does not seem to have had any permanent effect, for eleven years later (in 1633) the Visitor, in the person of the Archbishop of York (Richard Neyle) reported that 'Your Ma'ties Collegiate Church at Manchester . . . was found to be altogether out of order, where there is neither singing men, nor Quiristers, nor Organ fitt to use.' At that time the warden and fellows scarcely ever came to prayers, and one of the fellows was suspended because he would not put on a surplice to read prayers, giving as his reason that he had not done so for thirty years.

More definite information concerning the organ is that of the little instrument built by Father Smith in 1680 or 1684. It consisted of one manual only, and contained the following stops, exactly according to the specification written by the late Dr. E. J. Hopkins in his MS. organ book, now in the possession of the present writer:

Total number of pipes = 334. Compass GG, with GG sharp, to d⁸ in alt.

* 'Wo, it is no doubt a Recorder, "unison to the voice," as some old writers express it.' (Dr. Hopkins's note.)

Father Smith's organ, which has been carefully restored and pedal pipes (Bourdon) added, now stands in the north aisle of the choir, and is in a state of excellent preservation. Charming in tone, it is often used for services held in the Derby thirty-three years, one-manual Father Smith organ to accompany the cathedral services! In 1861 an entirely new instrument of three manuals was built by Nicholson, of Worcester, and placed on the north side of the choir, outside the iron screen-work, nearer the altar, thus replacing the Father Smith instrument. Eleven years later (in 1872), during the organistship of Sir Frederick Bridge, Messrs. Hill & Sons erected the present organ, the case being designed by Sir Gilbert Scott. The following is the specification of the instrument as it now stands:

In regard to matters choral, we have already seen that the charter of Henry V. (1422) included 'six boy choristers' on the foundation. charter of Elizabeth (1578) decreed the following payments:

To every chorister, fourpence halfpenny a-day. To every singing-boy, twopence halfpenny farthing a-day.

The charter granted by Charles I. (September 30, 1635) ordered 'that there be continually in the said college four men, whether clerks or laymen, four boys skilled in music, which may perform prayers and other divine services in the said church,' also an organist. Mention must be made Chapel. The illustration on p. 635 shows that it of Nicholas Stratford, warden from 1667 to 1684, originally stood on the screen. It had as a as the 'antiphonal style of singing, and the old companion a two-manual instrument built by chanting so long disused in the choir, were care-Parker (or Glyn & Parker), of Salford, in 1730, fully restored by him, and he did much to improve or, according to another authority, in 1742. This, the music of the church.' It was near the end of which may be regarded as a parochial organ, was Stratford's wardenship that the Father Smith organ removed to the west end in 1828 for the festival was placed in the church. Writing to Miss Maria already referred to, and there it remained for Hackett, the choristers' friend, early in the last leaving only the little century, the Rev. Dr. Thomas Blackburne, warden from 1800 to 1823, said: 'The choristers receive annually £5 from the College, and one penny each from the marriages, which averages to each boy about three shillings weekly; so that their income four choristers and four chanters, with two assistant-choristers, will be about five shillings per week.'

They also preach a sermon during the summer months at seven o'clock in the morning on Sundays.

None of the clergymen chant the service, but a choral service, similar to that of Tallis, has long been used. . At the early morning lecture the Litany only is read; the Litany in the Choral Service is sung in the minor key; the Communion Service on Sundays is read from the desk, the altar being too far off: on Saints' days a sanctus is sung during the time the clergyman walks from the stalls to the altar: the daily psalms are always chanted.

The choir chanters [lay-clerks] are only obliged to attend on Wednesday and on Friday mornings and Saints' day mornings: so that the choristers have most of the duty to do; now in a cathedral church this should not be the case, as it can scarcely be expected that the boys will pay that attention when alone, which they should do.

In strong contrast to these records of the past is the present manner of rendering the services in Manchester Cathedral. When Sir Frederick Bridge retired, the choir consisted of six men and sixteen boys. Shortly after Dr. Pyne's arrival another bass was added, and the boys were boarded, lodged and taught in their own house. Unfortunately this additional expenditure was challenged by the Rectors of the greater parish of Manchester, who received some portions of the revenues, and after a long series of trials a verdict was given against the Dean and Canons, the finding turning on the obscure wording of the Charter and different readings of the Act which converted the collegiate church into a cathedral. The result was that, in about 1881, the choir became reduced to four men, the boys' house was shut up, and only four boys were paid, the rest, numbering some sixteen choristers, being rewarded only by receiving a free education without board. The Chapter shortly afterwards generously made up the number of men to six, but there were little or no resources for new music, &c. These conditions continued until some four or five years ago, when more funds were at the disposal of the Dean.

The choir now consists of nine men, four foundation boys, sixteen paid choristers, and ten probationers. The boys receive an excellent education in their own school, under two clerical and one lay master, and partial board (dinner). The balance of tone is excellent, the boys being particularly good.

Among former Precentors occur the names of the Rev. Dr. Troutbeck, afterwards Precentor of Westminster Abbey, and the Rev. Clementi Smith, a relative of the composer, Muzio Clementi. The present holder of the office is the Rev. Hubert March, who attends to the discipline with satisfactory results, and is in himself a devoted lover of music, especially of the romantic school.

During the last four years—largely owing to the increased means at disposal—the cathedral services have attained to a very high standard. On Sunday evenings the cathedral choir is replaced by on the early appearances of the tune.

voluntary singers, numbering some fifty voices. This service, which is purely parochial, was begun in a small way about fifty years ago in the Derby Chapel; it has attained its present popularity during the organistships of Sir Frederick Bridge and Dr. Pyne. Mr. Cradock is the choirmaster of the evening service, and he also assists with the daily training of the boys.

Lastly, the organists. The earliest recorded 'chief musician' is John Leigh, who held office from 1635 to 1637. His successors have no claim to distinction unless it be in their names—e.g., Stringer, Keys, and Edge. The last-named gentleman brings us to the year 1714, when Edward Betts began his long reign of fifty-three years. His fame rests in an octavo publication entitled 'An Introduction to the Skill of Musick' (1724). From a copy of the book in the Henry Watson Music Library, we find that the work contained 'Several chants in four parts for choir musick,' also 'A rule how to express the words in a soft easie manner, with excellent anthems, compos'd by very famous authors.' The 'soft easie manner' of pronunciation according to Mr. Betts deserves to be quoted in full:

Rules to be observed in Singing, how to express the Syllables of those Words which end in bi, ci, di, li, ni, pi, ri, ry, si, shi, ti, ty.

Some of the Words which end in ty and ry, are, Almighty, Empty, Glory, Majesty, Trinity, Victory, &c. These following have their Syllables above mention'd in the middle, as well as at the end of the Words, such as, Babilon, Benignity, Champion, Divide, or Divided (this Word hath the Syllables in the beginning,) as Felicity, Inventions, Misery, Omnipotent, Posterity, Shiver, Supplications, Unicorns, &c.

Twelve Examples may serve for all other Words of the Example, Felicity, which tho' the Letters are well exprest in reading, yet they seem to alter when they are sung. For instance, when the word or Syllables are drawn out long, they are exprest as, lie, cie, tie, which should be if bi as bee, ci as cee, or see, di as dee, li as lee, ni as nee, pi as pee, ri as ree, si as see, shi as shee, ti and ty, as tee. These being well observ'd and Practis'd will be of great use to those that delight in Singing.

The Chetham College Grace is said to have been composed by Edward Betts. He was followed by three Wainwrights in succession—John Wainwright, who had been deputy-organist, 1767-68; his son, Dr. Robert Wainwright, 1768-75; and the brother of Robert, Richard Wainwright, 1775-82. first of this trio of Manchester organists composed the time-honoured tune to 'Christians, awake!'*

It is one of those curiosities connected with patronymics, that while Manchester was in the diocese which embraced the county of Cheshire, one of its organists should be named Cheese. He—Griffith James Cheese—succeeded Richard Wainwright in 1783 and held office until 1804. It was doubtless due to his being a sightless

The present organist and master of the choristers is Dr. J. Kendrick Pyne, who has held office since 1875 and of whom a biographical sketch is subjoined. Dr. Pyne is shortly relinquishing his cathedral duties. He will be succeeded by Drury Lane Theatre, February 25, 1814, under. Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, acting-organist of the direction of Sir George Smart. He was also Carlisle Cathedral, who will enter upon his duties at the beginning of next year.

He sang the tenor solos in Beethoven's 'Mount of Olives' on the occasion of its first performance in England, at chief tenor alternately at Drury Lane and Covent Garden, and his name appears in many old programmes. At the Gentlemen's Concerts at Manchester it is of frequent occurrence. Three years previously he had been appointed choirmaster of the Foundling Hospital Chapel, with the music of which he and his wife were long associated. He died September 23, 1857, the Gentleman's Magazine stating that he had been for 'upwards of forty-six years a member of the Foundling choir.' On the Sunday following the death of this popular style; the modulations both in the Introduction and bass Solo are quite remarkable for the period. A little male-voice anthem, 'Behold, how good and joyful,' composed by him when he was Past Grand Organist of Somersetshire, is sung at Masonic gatherings all over the world.

After having held the organistships of St. Mark's Church, Pentonville, and the Episcopal Chapel (now St. Bartholomew's Church), Gray's Inn Road -both under the incumbency of the Rev. Thomas Mortimer - Mr. Pyne, in December, 1839, became organist of Bath Abbey Church. This appointment he held with great distinction for upwards of half-a-century. On the occasion of his jubilee at Bath he was publicly presented by the Mayor, on behalf of the citizens, with three addresses and a purse of \pounds , 220, while his professional brethren, both far and near, further honoured the occasion by giving him a chiming clock and a pair of silver candlesticks, accompanied by some souvenirs made from the old Abbey oak. To Mr. Pyne's memory is a brass in Bath Abbey, designed by Dr. J. Kendrick Pyne—of whom more anon—of which a photograph is given opposite. The pineapple will not escape notice.

All Mr. Pyne's four children maintained the musical traditions of the family. One of his sons, Minton Pyne, became organist of St. Mark's Church, Philadelphia, U.S.A., and died April 20, 1905; another son, Ernest Wesley Pyne, was an organist and orchestral conductor who died in America, June 17, 1895, godson of Dr. S. S. Wesley; a daughter, Zoe (Mrs. Oliver Hueffer), is a well-known violinist; while his eldest son forms the subject of this biographical sketch.

Dr. James Kendrick Pyne was born at Bath, February 5, 1852. He began to study with his father, and as a boy of eleven was appointed organist of All Saints' Chapel, Bath, of which Canon Fleming, who died on September 1, 1908, was then the incumbent. At the age of twelve he was articled to Dr. S. S. Wesley, the organist of in his opinions. He lived in Wesley's Winchester Cathedral. house and removed with him to Gloucester on the appointment of his master to the organistship of that cathedral in 1865. For his general education Master Pyne attended the King's School, On the occasion of the speeches Gloucester. there on October 2, 1867, at the age of fifteen, the future organist of Manchester Cathedral distinguished himself in the part of Portia, and as Whiskerandos in scenes from Sheridan's 'Critic.' He treasures a letter written to his father by Wesley on the day of the performance, in which the great man says: 'I went to hear Kenny at the school-speaking to-day. He acted the Advocate "Portia" in a long scene from the Merchant of Venice. He was the best of the lot by very long odds. This, people seemed to know. Really, I am glad he got on so capitally well as I rather quaked at the thought of my assistant's speaking amongst the school boys. I wish you had been there.' In the same letter Wesley says: 'Thank whole thing is that the effect he produced was you for saying a good word for the songs. Try if always admirable. One could only fancy with you can do with them amongst pupils. You may terror "the howling of the wolf" in some of the

as well make them collywobble in this direction as in any other.' The following sentence in the letter is an instance of the 'pretty wit' of the composer of 'The Wilderness': 'That blind man can't see his way to pay me the 2s. 6d.

Dr. Pyne has pleasant recollections of his distinguished master. In recalling them he says: 'Wesley was in some respects the most striking and interesting character I have ever known. He had many fascinating points, one was his invariable love of, and kindness to children-never, on his part, an act of condescension. Any appreciation from the young, either of his music or performance, pleased him vastly. I remember his pleasure at the choice of one of his anthems for a special Sunday in the year—the choice being the privilege of the King's Scholars at Gloucester—by one of the young school boys, and his delight therein. He was of an affectionate disposition, and very jocular in his dealings with those whom he specially liked.

'I firmly believe that many of his so-called eccentricities proceeded from his keen and sometimes almost sardonic wit—in plain English, he sometimes played practical jokes, with an appearance of great innocence. For instance, the late Dr. Done, organist of Worcester Cathedral, once told me a story quite delightful in its way. Done and Wesley had dined together at some great house in the neighbourhood. In honour of Wesley, and knowing his likings, the host had provided a noble feast which included turtle. On their return, near the city the two organists dismissed their carriage and strolled slowly to the Cathedral Close. It was an exquisite night—fleeting clouds, picturesque glimpses of the silvery moon, and a solemn silence. Wesley appeared to be deeply affected by all this, and at last he turned to his companion, his face working, apparently in a state of deep emotion, and in poetic accents he murmured "Did you get any of the green fat?"

'Independent in his views, Wesley was decided How delightful it was to hear him expatiate on Bach, whom, simply and admiringly, he regarded as the "Alpha and Omega" of music. Yet he was eclectic in his tastes: for instance, he admired Spohr, the antithesis of the Leipzig Cantor. I imagine this liberality and elasticity of his views may give some little insight into his varied character.

'That he had a great love for the picturesque was undeniable. I have walked with him many, many miles in the most rugged of scenery and difficult of ways: on and on he would tramp, speechless and absorbed, but absolutely drinking in every detail.

'With regard to his extempore playing, most astonishing was his method of chromatic and extreme harmonies on instruments tuned to the unequal temperament. Apparently this made not the slightest difference in his modulation; one could only imagine that early custom and habit made it possible for him to endure extreme keys on such a temperament. The oddest part of the whole thing is that the effect he produced was descending passages preceding "And a highway shall be there." My brother, Minton, who was with Wesley the last time he played "The Wilderness" at Gloucester, told me that the tears ran down his cheeks at the words "And sorrow and sighing shall flee away." He little knew how soon they would flee for ever.

'How wonderfully he was in advance of his time is, I imagine, quite apparent. Listen to such a passage as the sequential one in his anthem "Praise the Lord, O my soul," at the words "Let all them that trust in Thee rejoice." Surely this is the acme of all that is modern and advanced. The building up of discord after discord, and suspension after suspension, results in such a climax that I venture to think such subtlety has never been surpassed—in some respects, possibly, never equalled.'

During his pupilage at Gloucester young Pyne held, in his teens, three church organ appointments in succession-Christ Church, St. Mark's, and He was choirmaster to the St. Mary-le-Crypt. Festival Society, and helped Wesley in the arrangements of the Three Choirs Festivals of 1868 and At the former meeting he played as voluntaries four of Bach's Fugues at the various services. In this connection THE MUSICAL TIMES said in regard to the opening service: 'The music was scrambled through in evident haste; and had it not been for the excellent organ playing of Mr. J. K. Pyne, jun. (a pupil of Dr. Wesley), there would have been little to interest the musical portion of the congregation.' From the same source we learn that Mr. J. K. Pyne, senr., appeared as a vocalist on that occasion, as he and others 'lent their valuable assistance in the fine quintet (soloist, Madame Tietjens) "The Lord hath commanded" in Mendelssohn's Psalm "As pants the hart." At this same Festival (1868) Sir Hubert Parry first obtained public recognition as a composer by his 'Intermezzo Religioso' for orchestra. In recording the Gloucester Festival of 1871, THE MUSICAL TIMES, by the pen of its then editor, Mr. Henry C. Lunn, said, in regard to the opening service: 'Favourable mention must be made of the excellent way in which Bach's Pedal Fugue in B minor was played by Dr. Wesley's pupil, Mr. J. K. Pyne.' As a youth of eighteen he found an outlet for his skill in the use of the baton as conductor of the Gloucester Oratorio Society. The first concert of that organization is thus recorded in the Gloucester Journal of November 5, 1870:

GLOUCESTER ORATORIO SOCIETY.

On Friday evening, the 28th ult., this Society gave its first concert in the shape of a performance of Handel's 'Israel in Egypt.' There was a good audience. The principal vocalists were, Miss Emily Spiller, soprano; Miss Palmer, contralto; Mr. Raynham, tenor; Mr. Brandon, bass. Dr. Wesley presided at the organ, and Mr. J. K. Pyne officiated as conductor. There was a good band under the leadership of Mr. W. E. Salmon. . . . Considering the great difficulty of the work, the performance altogether was highly satisfactory.

passages in "The Wilderness," notably "For in Here was ambition exemplified—a young man the wilderness shall waters break forth," or in the of eighteen conducting 'Israel in Egypt,' with Dr. S. S. Wesley at the organ! A performance of 'Judas Maccabæus,' with 'Perry's additional accompaniments,' soon followed, on December 13, Mr. Edward Lloyd, then a rising young tenor, being one of the soloists. To quote again from the Gloucester Journal (December 17, 1870):

> There was a most efficient chorus and a superb band, strengthened by the organ, which was in the experienced and skilful hands of Dr. Wesley, one of the first of English organists. Mr. J. Kendrick Pyne officiated as conductor, and though young to the work, showed himself thoroughly efficient.

> The young conductor must have inspired his singers with his own energy and enthusiasm, as in the following month—January 31, 1871—another concert was given at which Wesley's 'Ode to labour' was performed, the composer exchanging places with his pupil in the rendering of that work.

> In 1871 Pyne became organist of St. James's Church, Cheltenham, an appointment which he exchanged in 1872 for the Parish Church, Aylesbury; this he obtained through the friendly offices of Sir Frederick Ouseley. He was also conductor of the Vale of Aylesbury Church Choral Association and of the Vale of Aylesbury Harmonic Society. From Aylesbury he migrated to Christ Church, Clifton, in the spring of 1873, where he remained for only a few months until his appointment, in the same year, to Chichester Cathedral: thus he became a cathedral organist at the age of twenty-one. His stay in the Sussex city was also very short, as he left there in December of that year (1873) to become organist of St. Mark's Church, Philadelphia. He was nominated to this appointment by Barnby, and he would probably have remained in America had he been successful in obtaining the Chair of Music at the University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia. Upon hearing that some cathedral appointments were 'going' in the old country, he re-crossed the Atlantic, and in October, 1875, was appointed to the organistship of Manchester Cathedral, in succession to Dr. (now Sir) J. Frederick Bridge, then translated to Westminster Abbey. This appointment, for which there were sixty-five candidates, he has since held with distinction for a period of thirty-three years. At the end of the present year he will retire from that post, but he will retain his Town Hall and University appointments, his Professorship at the Manchester Royal College of Music, and his Lectureship at Owens College.

> To complete the other appointments, honours, &c., of Dr. Pyne, the following must be placed on record: -1877, Organist to the Corporation of Manchester and Honorary Fellow of the College (now Royal College) of Organists; 1887, organist of the Royal Jubilee Exhibition, Manchester: 1888, English member of the Jury, Brussels International Exhibition; 1893, Professor of the Organ, Manchester Royal College of Music; 1900 (July 10), created a Doctor of Music by the Archbishop of Canterbury (Dr. Temple); 1901, Lecturer on Church Music, Victoria University, Manchester; 1902, Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, and Honorary Member of the Royal Academy of Music; 1903, Organist to Victoria University. He is also president of the Guild of Organists and Dean of the Faculty of Music at Victoria University.

For thirty-three years Dr. Pyne has been a prominent figure in the public life of Manchester. First and foremost has been his cathedral appointment, to which, day by day, literally in season and out of season, he has given of his best. How he loves the beautiful building, and how sore will be his official parting with the hallowed fane he has served so long and so faithfully! It is a pleasant experience to sit with him in the organ loft and to hear him play a service. That he thoroughly enjoys it play a service. has proof. abundant accompaniments to the Psalms are always suggestive and yet governed by artistic restraint. In accompanying the Venite, at the verse before the Gloria Patri he couples the Great organ to the Pedals, still keeping his hands on the Swell keyboard, remarking 'That is how Wesley used to do it.' When any verse particularly strikes his fancy, he bursts into song, as, for instance, on the 27th morning of the month (Psalm cxx., v. 3), at the words 'hot burning coals,' which he shouts out with a corresponding stoking of the organ, so to speak. Indeed, he is all on fire with an enthusiasm that would take a great deal to quench. Like his eminent master, he has a remarkable gift for extemporaneous playing. At the end of a service he will play an elaborate and well worked out voluntary, rich in invention and full of contrapuntal resource, which excites the admiration and gives real pleasure to the listener. Sometimes his fancy so absorbs him that he goes on quite oblivious of the clock. An instance of this occurred on last Ascension Day, in the prelude to Croft's of Ford Madox Brown. anthem 'God is gone up,' when one of the In the class room lay-clerks wrote in his copy of the work 'Dr. Pyne extemporised on this for fifteen minutes: I lost my train'! With the choristers at their daily practice Dr. Pyne is no less in his element. He trains his boys to sing naturally and with good tone, 'I do not allow them to become human occarinas,' he says. Everything is kept going with genial energy, and his directions are not without originality, as when he says to the boys—who have not sufficiently emphasised the aspirate in the anthem 'O God, my heart is ready' -speaking in a moment of hushed solemnity and with a most serious countenance, 'I just want to remind you that the seat of the human affections is the Heart, not Art.'

As organist to the Corporation of Manchester, Dr. Pyne is very much at home when seated at the keyboard of Cavaillé-Coll's fine instrument, in the noble Town Hall which is an architectural triumph of the genius of the late Alfred As a master he was a strict disciplinarian, but for all that Waterhouse, R.A. Since the erection of the (perhaps because of that) we used to anticipate our lessons organ in 1877, Dr. Pyne has on successive with expectant eagerness, sure of a kind word if the wor'-

Saturday evenings charmed countless listeners by his brilliant performances. He has kept all his programmes, and as, in his cosy little room at the Town Hall, he takes down the volumes into which the programmes have been pasted, he points with pride to the great variety of the pieces in his extensive répertoire and to the fact that he very seldom repeats a piece in the course of the year. 'My audiences are most attentive,' he says, 'they are so quiet that if anyone coughs or makes the least disturbing noise while the pieces are being played, indignation on the part of the audience soon manifests itself. I often receive letters in which the writers express their gratification at the pleasure afforded them at these organ performances on Saturday evenings.' He has performed at all the Royal visits to Manchester —T.R.H. the Princess Mary of Cambridge (Duchess of Teck), the Duke of Edinburgh, Prince Victor, and their Majesties the King and Queen on July 13, 1905.

He also gives frequent recitals on Willis's fine instrument at Whitworth Hall, Victoria University. In showing the twelve richly-coloured panels on the walls of the Town Hall, painted by Ford Madox Brown—some of them, by the way, being executed in a modified form of the Gambier Parry process—Dr. Pyne points out that he himself, Mrs. Pyne, and five of their children figure in the scenes so brilliantly and beautifully illustrating the history of Manchester. Mr. William Michael Rossetti, in his 'Some reminiscences' (1906) says, referring to Ford Madox Brown: 'Mr. Kendrick Pyne's organ recitals in the Town Hall formed one of the most genuine enjoyments of Brown while domiciled in Manchester, and cheered many of his workinghours in the same building.' Dr. Pyne and the great painter were friends of many years' standing, Miss Zoe Pyne marrying Dr. Francis Hueffer's son Oliver, a nephew of Gabriel Rossetti, and grandson

In the class room of the Manchester Royal College of Music, as chief professor of the organ, Dr. Pyne's personality has a marked influence on his pupils. 'I endeavour,' he says, 'to broaden their interests—architecture, pictures, scenery, and literature—and not to make them simply musicians, and I believe with some measure of success.' this connection the following 'appreciation' has been kindly contributed by Dr. A. W. Pollitt, organist and director of the choir of St. Mary's Church for the Blind, Liverpool:

I should like to say a few words of personal appreciation of Dr. Pyne, and his magnetic personality. For several years I was an organ pupil of his at the Royal Manchester College of Music and, later, his assistant at Manchester Cathedral. Few men can be as charming and interesting as he when an individual or a subject interests him, for he has a wide and eclectic taste not only in art generally, but in literature also, and his home is a veritable museum of choice treasures and interesting works.

were well done, and equally sure of a quip or crank, or a quaintly worded conceit, delivered in his own inimitable manner, which would send us away bubbling over with mirth and already looking forward to our next lesson.

One of the greatest joys of those happy college days was to be asked by Dr. Pyne to go down to the cathedral and 'play in' the choir and clergy. He would come later, in time to play the Psalms, and if in the right mood he would improvise a five or ten minutes' introduction to the Anthem in a style which, while abounding with contrapuntal dexterity and harmonic subtlety, never lost the true dignity which the organ calls for in its treatment, and which so many players are totally unable to impart to their performances.

Another noteworthy feature in those never-to-be-forgotten improvisations was the wonderful building-up of tonecrescendos which were even more felt than heard. Their effect upon me was as though some irresistible force were drawing me up from my seat towards the ceiling; every moment one's excitement grew more and more tense, and the entry of the Tuba was like an electric shock! More than ten years have passed since the above impressions were made, yet they are as vivid as though they occurred but yesterday.

Considering the remarkable fluency and charm of Dr. Pyne's musical utterances, it is a great pity he has not devoted more time to composition. His Communion Service in A flat is one of the most original and effective of settings, and I can give no greater pleasure to my choir than to tell them it is on the next Sunday's service list.

which he is Dean of the Faculty of Music-Dr. Pyne is always interesting. To an excellent as an institution. delivery he has a distinct literary style—somewhat rare among musicians—which, seasoned with a little pawky humour and served up with an expressive countenance, make his lectures an enjoyable feature of University life. At graduation and other functions at Victoria University, Dr. Pyne presides at the Willis organ, the generous gift of the late Mrs. Rylands, in the spacious Whitworth Hall.

As a composer he is best known by his Communion Service in A flat, with orchestral accompaniment; a Festival Evening Service in F; a 'Tantum Ergo'; and a Morning Service in D. His setting of the Chetham Litany is favourably known in Manchester, where it is frequently sung at the cathedral, and his Elegy in G minor for the organ is one of the popular pieces at the Town Hall recitals; also a March, invariably used on Degree Days at the University: all these lyrics of Edwin Waugh, the Lancashire poet, impossible to find a seat there. known as 'the Lancashire Burns.'

These, becoming too bulky for a private house, passed into the possession of Mr. Henry Boddington, of Pownall Hall, Wilmslow, Cheshire, but they were dispersed when sold in 1903.

At the approaching Church Congress, to be held at Manchester during the second week of this month, music will be primarily represented by Dr. Pyne, who will read a paper on 'The Oratorio for Special Services in our Parish Churches.' In this connection no better conclusion to this brief biography of a much esteemed and genial musician could be found than that kindly contributed by the Dean of Manchester, the Right

Reverend Bishop Welldon, who says:

'In Manchester there is no more familiar or more popular figure than that of Dr. Pyne. organist of the cathedral, of the city and of the University, he touches upon all its sides the musical life of the great community in which he has spent so many years. He is so well and for so long a time has been known to the citizens of Manchester, that he has come to be in As Lecturer on Music at Victoria University—of their eyes much more than an organist, more even than a personality: it is natural to think of him deficiency of my technical knowledge.

'Dr. Pyne's admirers would, I think, agree in declaring that he attains his highest distinction as an executant upon the organ. Perhaps the most remarkable of his achievements has been his success in maintaining year after year the Saturday evening organ recitals in the Town Although a charge has been made for attendance at these recitals, and he has never condescended to humour any part of his audience by lowering the standard of the music which he performs, the compositions are at present in manuscript. a benefactor of their city.'

IS THE SYMPHONY DOOMED?

It would seem that after all the Symphony is not doomed to an early death, as the champions of the Symphonic Poem have for some years past tried to make us believe. Though the latter, like so many of the best things appertaining to our Art, originated in Germany, and though brought to its present remarkable development by Richard Strauss, yet there are plenty of German musicians who still prefer the grand old form in which the great masters since Haydn expressed their deepest thoughts, and poured out their hearts in deathless We are continually reading of new Symphonies produced abroad; and if they are not all epoch-making works, if in fact little is brought forth that seems worthy of joining on to Brahms's great work in E minor, the last of the links in the chain of masterpieces forged by the classics, yet they are serious efforts and palpable proofs that the symphonic form has not lost its follow his No. 7, the 'Watts' symphony. fascination for earnest musicians.

New symphonies are shortly to be performed, or have been recently brought to a hearing, by Gustav Mahler, Xaver Scharwenka, August Bungert, Ferdinand Hummel and Felix Woyrsch. The last named-whose 'Passion music' will be one of the novelties at the approaching Bristol Festival—is responsible for a Symphony in C minor, produced at Altona, near Hamburg. This work a leading Hamburg paper hails in all seriousness as 'the long-expected Brahms No. 5,' thus recalling Hans von Bülow's dictum that the great Johannes' first Symphony, in C minor, might be regarded as Beethoven's No. 10. Woyrsch is certainly a composer of the type of which symphonic writers are made, wherefore it may be hoped that genuine melodic inspiration will in his case go hand in hand with the profound contrapuntal knowledge and mastery of form which he unquestionably possesses.

Slavonic composers are not idle. Gospodin Mili Balakirev is about to publish a Symphony in D minor, No. 2, which is announced for first work in five movements, bearing the fine, suggestive | may do in other fields of composition.'

Nor may I forget the simple but title of 'Asrael,' though distinctly free in its form, is yet to all purposes a Symphony. It is dedicated, by-the-way, to the memory of Suk's father-in-law, Anton Dvorák, who did such yeoman service in the cause of the Symphonic form, and yet added least to his reputation.

And what shall be said of our own composers? Happily they are not lagging behind in the noble fight. Music-lovers are looking forward with keen interest to the production of Elgar's Symphony in A flat, soon to be produced, under Dr. Richter, at Manchester. It is rare for a composer to wait till his fiftieth year before turning his attention to the greatest of art forms. Brahms arrived late at that point, though the Pianoforte concerto in D minor, dating from his earliest manhood, was originally meant for a Symphony. It was only changed into a Concerto because the young master had to confess himself insufficiently versed in the art of instrumentation to do justice to that Finale which had long been buzzing in his head, and which was doubtless something like the glorious Finale eventually used for his first Symphony, an ending which, it may safely be assumed, was to suggest the apotheosis of Schumann's genius, just as the opening Allegro of the Concerto, as we know it now, deals, no doubt, with the terrible tragedy of that master's last years.

Amongst other British composers who have symphonies in preparation, mention may be made of Dr. Walford Davies and Mr. W. H. Bell; both works will be welcomed as efforts by singularly talented men. Some time ago Dr. F. H. Cowen was reputed to be engaged upon his 'No. 7 in D minor,' and one would not be surprised if Sir Charles Stanford were busy with a work to

In conclusion, the Symphony has little to fear from its later rival the Symphonic Poem. A composer may be as 'modern,' as thoroughly imbued with the Zeitgeist as is possible; he may have every latest technical device at his fingers' end and seem equipped for the heavy task of emulating the finest achievements of Richard Strauss: but if he has anything to say that is worth saying and listening to, he can, in the great and enduring form of the Symphony, express himself as completely, and convincingly, and produce the deepest possible impression upon his audience as effectually, as can the most zealous exponent of the Symphonic poem.

To quote Sir Hubert Parry: 'It is not likely that many will be able to follow Brahms in his severe and uncompromising methods; but he himself has shown more than anyone how elastic the old principles may yet be made without departing from the genuine type of abstract instrumental music; and that when there is room for individual expression there is still good work to be done, though we can hardly hope that even the performance by the Philadelphia (U.S.A.) Symphony greatest composers of the future will surpass the Orchestra under Herr Pohlig; and Pan Josef Suk's symphonic triumphs of the past, whatever they

From THE MUSICAL TIMES of sixty years ago:

THE WORCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.—The 125th meeting of the choirs of Worcester, Hereford, and Gloucester, took place on September 5, 6, 7, and 8. The first morning was dedicated, as usual, to a Cathedral Service, produced on an effective scale, and forms one of the most interesting features of these meetings. On the present occasion the prices of admission had been much lowered, especially the side aisles, and those portions set apart for the general public; this improvement had been recommended in former years, and the greatly-increased attendance on the present occasion shews how ready the less wealthy portions of the community Handel's Dettingen Te Deum—Purcell's Jubilate in D— Hayes's anthem, O worship the Lord—Mendelssohn's beautiful anthem, As the hart pants—with the delightful old preces and responses by Tallis, formed the musical portions of the service. On the other days the public had the opportunity of hearing the following works for the most part entire:—Mendelssohn's Elijah, 'Spring' from Haydn's Seasons, Haydn's Creation, Beethoven's Engedi, a selection from Crotch's Falestine, and the ever fresh Messiah of Handel. The orchestra numbered about 350 well selected instrumental and vocal performers. The financial part of the Festival appears to have been more than usually successful; and the collections at the doors, which go without deduction to the charity, amounted to £960.— The Musical Times, October, 1848.

'Mendelssohn as an Orientalist' forms the subject of an article which Mr. H. V. Mouradian has contributed to the August issue of The New Music Review and Church Music Review, a monthly journal published by the H. W. Gray Co., New York. On hearing 'Elijah' for the first time, Mr. Mouradian, who has lived in the East, was struck with the Orientalism in the oratorio. In giving instances of these Eastern touches he says that the tenor choral recitative, 'The harvest now is over,' has 'most undoubtedly the characteristics of Oriental music.' Again, 'The duet "Zion spreadeth her hands for aid," with its weird, mystic and monotonous chorus accompaniment, "Lord, bow Thine ear to our prayer," would be enough to make you swear by your patron saint that Mendelssohn must have visited some Tekke (Mohammedan monastery) and heard those whirling dervishes, or passed through the wailing places of the Jews in Referring to the duet between the Widow and Elijah, Mr. Mouradian declares that the two phrases 'Help me, O man of God,' and 'I go mourning all the day long 'correspond almost note by note to a Turki much sung in cases, an extract from an epic poem called Kosah Oghloo, in which the adventures of a noted highwayman are praised in song. As to Elijah's part, there is nothing remarkably Oriental in its suggestions, one might say, until we come to the great aria 'It is enough.'

Of the first Baal chorus, he says:

From the standpoint of length and exactness of imitation, we find the full expression of this Orientalism, as I have ventured to call it, in the well-known chorus 'Baal, we cry to thee.' Mendelssohn, if he did not actually visit some Mendelssohn, if he did not actually visit some of the Tekkes of those 'whirling dervishes,' must surely have possessed a divine power of guessing what the music of those Oriental religious devotees is like, in order to give us such a true tone-picture of all that is exquisitely wild in the music of the modern Mohammedan devotee.

consume his offering,' first given by the basses and followed by the tenors, 'presents an almost exact reproduction of part of a Turki called Haleb Alushdurmasi (Aleppo Overture).' He adds: 'These are a few of the surprises that one familiar with Oriental music will find throughout this great work.'

A Berlin newspaper announces that Professor Georg Schumann, conductor of the Singakademie and one of the committee of the New Bach Society, has acquired a recently-discovered portrait of the great Cantor, which is to be added to the Bach Museum at Eisenach. The picture was formerly in the possession of Herr Held, of Magdeburg, and its painter is a certain Meister Klein, who is said to have enjoyed some fame as a portrait painter in the thirties of the 18th century. There seems some doubt, however, as to whether the painting really represents Bach, though Professor Schumann is reputed to be the foremost living authority on existing Bach portraits, and he has attached particular importance to the acquisition of Professor Hiss, of Leipzig this new discovery. University, who undertook detailed measurements of Bach's skull some years ago, is therefore to compare these with the picture, in order to remove any doubts that may exist in the minds of sceptics.

The Newcastle Musical Festival is to be held in the Palace Theatre, Haymarket, during the week beginning October 18, 1909. Monday and Tuesday will be devoted to rehearsals, and the festival proper, which is to consist of six concerts, will be held on the Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. The arduous duties of chorus-master will be undertaken by Dr. Henry Coward, of Sheffield, who also has been appointed one of the conductors, and he will have as colleague another distinguished conductor, who has yet to be selected. In the case of works by living composers, the committee will endeavour to secure the attendance of the composers themselves to conduct their own compositions. That the London Symphony Orchestra has been engaged for the festival is good

The Municipality of Vienna have acquired for about 100,000 kronen (about £4,150) the house 'Zum roten Krebsen' (at the sign of the Red Crab), No. 54, Nussdorfer Strasse, in which Franz Schubert—'the one great composer native to Vienna,' as Grove wrote -was born. Needless to say, it will be converted into a Schubert museum. This will be opened in October, and the Vienna Schubert Bund (Society) are making arrangements for holding a festival in connection with the event. The programme will be devoted to works by the master.

Under the heading 'Research Notes,' in the Science Section of the Athenaum of August 29, is the following:

In the 'Archiv für Anatomie' of Berlin, Prof. Auerbach announces the discovery of the centre of musical perception in the brain, which he places in the left side of the forehead, and in the second circumvolution. He has arrived at this by the autopsy of the corpse of one Stockhauser [? Stockhausen], a celebrated German singer, compared with that of Herr Koning, once professor at the Frankfort Conservatory. He quotes in support of his view the case of a singer who at a certain time of his life became suddenly In the chorus 'The fire descends from heaven,' the incapable of producing a single note, and was found at his writer of the article says that the phrase 'The flames death to have suffered from a cyst in this very circumvolution.

A very charming story of long, long ago, and one very characteristic of Liszt's wonderful good nature and generosity, is told in his 'Reminiscences,' by Rochus, Freiherr von Liliencron, whose name may be recalled in connection with the great collection of German folk-songs recently made at the instigation of the Kaiser, who appointed Herr von Liliencron chairman of the committee of musical experts entrusted with 'Liszt had been told,' writes Herr von the task. Liliencron, that the majority of the poor students at the Berlin University were unable to pay the high prices charged for his concerts, though they were the very men amongst whom he might wish to plant the germs of enthusiasm for his art. Liszt therefore immediately announced a concert in the "Aula" of the University, to which only members of the institution were to obtain tickets, and at the low price of 10 Groschen (one shilling), the receipts to be devoted to the fund for the benefit of poor students. Naturally, the hall was crowded. But, alas! the professors had counted themselves amongst "members of the University," and thus they abused Liszt's generosity in a manner far from commendable. They came with their wives, children and friends, and occupied the whole front half of the room before a single student was admitted. There was no mistaking Liszt's anger when he saw what had happened. Yet he was kind enough not to let the guiltless suffer with the culprits. He played grandly and wonderfully, and chose all the best and most admired pieces in his répertoire, and improvised. Cheered by the frenetic applause of his audience, he added piece after piece by way of encores.

'When Liszt reached his carriage, accompanied by cheering students into the street, where "Burschen" and "Füchse" were gathered in full force, some of the young men attempted to unharness his horses. sooner did Liszt notice this, than he jumped out of his carriage, took the arms of two students nearest to him, and marched to his hotel in the Schinkelplatz, followed by his enthusiastic admirers. Standing on the steps of the hotel he turned towards us and invited as many of us as the largest room of the hotel would hold to enter, so that he might thank us. Forthwith he made a charming speech, doubtless about art, enthusiasm, youth, &c.—I cannot remember exactly. Then he said that he had heard how so many of the students were prevented from attending his concert because the seats had been appropriated beforehand by others. But he would give a second concert. "This time we shall be amongst ourselves, and nobody who is not a student shall gain admittance. Then I shall try to play the song which I have just heard you sing, though my ten fingers cannot possibly emulate the force and sonority of your eight hundred fresh, young throats. But I shall try to do my best, to show you my gratitude for the love with which you have received me to-day."'

'At the second concert in the Aula, soon afterwards, he played as promised, and perhaps extemporized, partly, the fantasia on "Gaudeamus igitur" which was afterwards printed. When Liszt left Berlin, by the "Extra-post," as was the custom then, the students accompanied him. They were "in Wichs" (gala uniform with sword, top-boots, &c.), some on horse-back, others in carriages. After a two hours' journey they reached the seat of a rich landed proprietor who had invited the whole procession into his house to drink farewell to the master in champagne. Liszt bade us good-bye in another speech in which he displayed once more his amiability in all its fascinating charm, and he closed with the words: "Wherever in life one of you may meet me again, there he shall be my welcome guest."

The Rev. J. S. B. Hodges, of Relay Station, Baltimore, son of Dr. Edward Hodges, the well-known organist of Bristol, writes as follows:

I recently came across a memorandum in my father's handwriting of his expenses in taking the degree of Doctor of Music at the University of Cambridge, in the year 1825. Thinking that it might be of interest to musical men to compare the cost of taking that degree now, with the cost only some eighty years ago, I send you the enclosed statement for such use as you may see fit to make of it.

Mr. Hodges also sends an extract from a local newspaper, dated July 9, 1825, giving an account of the performance of his father's (Dr. Hodges) degree exercise:

Sunday, St. Mary's Church was crowded to excess to witness the performance of a musical exercise, composed by Mr. Hodges, of Sidney Sussex College, in order to qualify him to take the degree of Doctor in Music. The candidate presided at the organ, and was aided by a full band and several members of the Windsor, Ely and other choirs, as well as by our collegiate lay clerks. The exercise was a somewhat difficult performance, and its chief fault was that it attempted too much; but it had many redeeming qualities about it, and passed off well. The anthem which followed, also composed by Mr. Hodges, from Psalm xcl. (sic), was better.

Herr August Bungert, of Berlin, composer of a number of music-dramas on Homeric subjects, has just completed a 'Grand heroic symphony,' which he has dedicated to Count Zeppelin, the famous aeronaut. The world will look forward to some high flights of fancy in Herr Bungert's music, and perhaps one of the movements will take the form of an air with variations for the 'wind'! Paris newspapers announce that Dr. Richard Strauss intends taking the subject of Molière's 'Tartuffe' for a comic opera. This is not at all unlikely!

On September 10 the London County Council affixed to the house numbered 34, Arlington Road, Camden Town, a memorial tablet to Charles Dibdin, the composer of 'Tom Bowling' and many other songs. The inscription on the tablet reads:

> CHARLES DIBDIN 1745—1814 Song - writer, Lived here

Dibdin is said to have resided in this house from 1810 until his death in 1814. It is to be hoped that care has been taken to affix the tablet to the actual habitation, as mistakes in this respect have been made, owing to the re-numbering of houses in London.

Special interest will probably be taken in the approaching election to the Mendelssohn Scholarship, in that next year will be the centenary of Mendelssohn's Musical students of either sex, between the ages of sixteen and twenty-two, being single, and natives of, or domiciled in Great Britain or Ireland, are eligible for election, the qualification being 'a decided talent for music, exhibited in composition.' The education of the successful candidate is carried on, in this country or abroad, under the control of the Committee. Former holders of the Scholarship have been Sir Arthur Sullivan (the first scholar), Mr. William Shakespeare, Mr. Frederick Corder, and Miss Maude Valerie White. Mr. Paul Victor Mendelssohn Benecke, grandson of the composer, has been elected honorary treasurer of the fund, and, in succession to the late Mr. J. Edward Street, the duties of honorary secretary have been undertaken by Mr. J. F. R. Stainer, from whom—by letter addressed to No. 1, New Court, Carey Street, W.C. full particulars of the Scholarship can be obtained.

A correspondent who signs himself 'Nimrod' writes: 'Being a Düsseldorfer, I was much interested in the Foreign Note in your September issue which stated that a tablet is to be affixed to the house in the Eilkerstrasse, in which the Schumanns lived for three years. Only I could not remember any Eilker Street in the fair garden city on the Rhine. Then it struck me that no doubt the Bilkerstrasse, named after the suburb Bilk, was meant. That street I know well, for as a little boy I went to school there. I connect it in my mind chiefly with sundry canings— no doubt well deserved—that I received, and with a fascinating baker's shop where we children used to spend our Pfennigs on capfuls of broken pieces of confectionery. Perchance it was the identical shop that supplied bread and cakes to the Schumanns some years before I patronized it to the tune of an occasional farthing. Rather a dull street my memory recalls, but it leads at right-angles to the Haroldstrasse, facing the ornamental water, the Schwanenspiegel, where Joseph Joachim lived for a time in 1855 in rooms procured for him by his young friend Johannes The latter was then living in Düsseldorf, so as to be near Frau Clara Schumann in her great trouble and anxiety due to her husband's tragic illness. Joachim's rooms would be within two or three minutes' Herr Kalbeck's statement in vol. i. of his Brahms | —Punch.

biography, that many Düsseldorfers would foregather on the promenade along the Schwanenspiegel, outside Joachim's rooms, to listen to the performances of quartets and other chamber music given by the young master-fiddler, his pupil K. L. Bargheer, a Danish friend, Waldemar Tofte, and a cultured amateur, Herr Assessor von Diest, who lived in the same house as Joachim, and was a violoncellist of sufficient excellence to play at the Lower Rhenish Festivals at the first desk.

'We may be sure that young Brahms—"der blonde Johannes" as his friends called him - profited greatly by these performances under so gifted a leader, for he had not previously enjoyed many chances of hearing classical chamber music. He would sit in the corner of the sofa, cover his eyes with his hand and utter never a word. Once, says Herr von Diest, during the playing of a Mozart Adagio he suddenly jumped up, walked with heavy steps to the door, and closed it behind him with a bang. He had felt like one seasick, he afterwards explained to Joachim, who remonstrated with him for his "rudeness"; he could not possibly listen to another note, he was too full of music! When a pianoforte was required for the performances, the party met at Frau Schumann's house. Brahms generally Brahms generally played the pianoforte part on these occasions, the hostess explaining her reluctance to take a share in the performances by remarking to Herr von Diest: "I do not like to play when Brahms is present. He is too severe a critic; and, alas! he is always right." While they are about it, why do not the Düsseldorfers affix a tablet to the house in the Schadowplatz where young Brahms lived at what was a turning point in his career? Are they perhaps ashamed of the notorious fact that when a new Musikdirektor had to be chosen in succession to Robert Schumann, they preferred a nonentity like Julius Tausch to the young genius then living in their midst who had been hailed as a "strong fighter" and the coming man in the clarior-tones of Schumann's famous Neue Bahnen article?

Herr Ernst von Dohnanyi and Mons. Henri Marteau have been appointed Royal Professors at Berlin, a notable honour in the case of such young artists, the more especially as both of them are foreigners. In the event of a war between France and Germany, Monsieur Marteau, being an officer of the Reserve in the French Army, would be placed in the awkward position of having to fight against his royal master, for, as professors at the Königliche Hochschule für Musik, these two gifted foreigners are of course the King of Prussia's 'servants.'

The Het Vaderland of August 22, in recording the performance of Sir Alexander Mackenzie's 'Pibroch' for violin and orchestra, performed by Herr Anton Witek at Scheveningen, refers to the work as 'the most interesting feature of the evening's music,' and the critic makes special mention of the brilliance of the orchestration.'

Piper: 'The varra pest music I never heard whatever was doun at Jamie Maclauchlan's. There wass fufteen o' us pipers in the wee back parlour, all playin' walk from the Schumanns' house. I can well believe different chunes. I thocht I was floatin' in heeven!'

WORCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL. (BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

'The Faithful City' was the scene of the 'One Hundred and Eighty-fifth Meeting of the Three Choirs of Worcester, Hereford, and Gloucester, for the benefit of the Widows and Orphans of Clergymen of the Three Dioceses,' to give the official designation of this ancient annual music-making. In accordance with a commendable custom of several years' standing, the festival opened on Sunday afternoon, September 6, with a 'Grand Opening Service,' held in the nave of the beautiful cathedral. A huge congregation, estimated at 3,500 persons, then assembled themselves together, and the following music was rendered by the festival choir and orchestra:

Organ Voluntary—' Festival monologue' .. W. Wolstenholme. Composed for this Service and played by the Composer.

> Organist Mr. E. T. Cook, Mus. B. (Assistant-Organist of the Cathedral.)

Mr. Ivor Atkins, Mus. B. (Organist of the Cathedral and Conductor of the Festival.)

Criticism of such a service is, of course, out of place; but the question might respectfully be asked, 'Why did not a hymn find its rightful place in the servicemusic?' When one recalls the thrilling effect of hymns sung by multitudinous congregations in St. Paul's Cathedral — the recent Pan-Anglican Congress, to wit—one cannot help thinking that a great opportunity was lost at Worcester in not giving those thousands of worshippers the opportunity of uplifting their voices in triumphant song. It was a happy thought to invite Mr. William Wolstenholme to play the outgoing voluntary, for was he not educated at the 'College for the blind sons of gentlemen,' at Worcester? His 'Festival monologue' suffered in being performed during the bustle caused by the departing congregation: its interpretation under more favourable conditions will be looked forward to with pleasure.

Monday was wholly devoted to full rehearsals, important preliminaries which afforded a good opportunity for estimating the choral and orchestral forces engaged upon the week's music. The choir, entirely furnished by the trio of cities constituting the Meeting, consisted of 258 voices, distributed thus:

Sopranos (boys, Altos (men, 13)		:	:	88 61
Tenors		•	-	-	54
Basses	•	•	•	٠,	55
	Total	•		- 7	258

For beauty of tone the palm must be awarded to the basses; and if, in the choral ensemble, one could not help missing the rhythmic grip, the vivifying force, and vigorous attack of northern choristers, there was much to commend in the quality of the voices of these western singers. The band—the players on stringed instruments, the Minnim of Holy Writ, numbering fifty-four performers—were the pick of London artists, their leader being Mr. W. Frye Parker. Need anything more be said on that point?

As in previous years the performers were located at the extreme west end of the building, where an organ had been erected by Messrs. Nicholson & Co., of Worcester. It was a happy thought of Mr. Atkins to connect by electricity the pedal board of this temporary instrument with the thirty-two feet pedal stop of the cathedral organ: the magnificent effect of those 'thirty-twos' in certain passages can be better imagined than described.

Preceded by Elgar's arrangement of the National Anthem, the festival proper opened with Mendelssohn's oratorio 'Elijah.' First heard at Worcester in 1848, it has been performed at each succeeding festival, except in 1875 (practically a non-festival year); thus the work completed its full-score of performances on this occasion. It is the fashion in some quarters nowadays to sneer, if not to jeer at Mendelssohn's choral masterpiece. The public heed not these vapid outpourings of 'superior' persons, but come in their thousands—2,320 at Worcester, to give the exact figures—in order to enjoy music which appeals to them, which they can understand, and which they thoroughly enjoy. Are they fools? With regard to the 'Elijah' performance, it failed to reach such a high level of excellence as might be wished. There was just the feeling of perfunctoriness in the rendering; but every allowance must be made for the difficulties attending the preparation of so much music, not a little of it new, in a short time. The speed was now and then somewhat motor-carish in its suggestiveness, whereby 'Thanks be to God,' for instance, lost some of its impressiveness. The soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Madame Clara Butt, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Charles W. Clark. Of the three first-named artists there is no occasion to speak. Mr. Clark, as the exponent of the Prophet, earnest artist though he be, failed to maintain the traditions of the title-rôle so eminently associated with Staudigl, Weiss, and Santley. The part of the Youth was sung by Master Tidmarsh, a Hereford chorister, and the following lent their aid in the concerted numbers: Madame Le Mar, Miss Dilys Jones, Messrs. J. Smith, F. Lightowler and G. Smith. It might be worth while considering in future whether the quartet and double-quartet in 'Elijah' would not suffer less if they were entrusted to some picked voices of the choir, as at Sheffield a few years ago, and properly rehearsed, especially from the blending point of view.

'We are very proud of him,' remarked a native shop-assistant to me what time I made some purchases in the 'Faithful City.' It is not difficult to identify the 'him' in this case, for is not Edward Elgar a citizen of Worcester? What more natural, then — apart from his widely-recognized genius—that two of his choral works should, in succession, be performed at this festival? These, 'The Dream of Gerontius' and 'The Kingdom,' were respectively sung on Tuesday evening and Wednesday morning, the former work being conducted by Mr. Atkins, while the latter was given under the composer's own direction. There is no need to enlarge upon these masterly compositions, for do they not speak for themselves in their gifted composer's own expressive language? Suffice it to say that the choir and orchestra did their best to enter into the spirit of the music entrusted to them, as did the soloists—Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Charles W. Clark in 'The Dream of Gerontius'; and Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. John Coates and Mr. William Higley in 'The Kingdom.'

The first novelty of the festival was produced after the luncheon hour on Wednesday (September 9),

As the libretto of the work, compiled by composer. Sir Hubert himself, has already been described in THE MUSICAL TIMES, it is only needful to make a few comments upon the music. Whatever may be said for or against Parry's creative gifts, no one can deny that there is a personality in all that comes from The man is reflected in his music, not only his geniality, but his earnestness of purpose and his high artistic ideals. In this his latest work, his soliloquy, ending with the words, 'And there was philosophy again finds musical expression: 'What no profit under the sun.' To this succeeds a typical under the sun?' is the question he puts and seeks to answer, the answer being that 'perfect peace' which 'passeth all understanding.' Two characteristic themes, first heard in the prelude, typify 'discontent' and 'perfect peace,' one the very antithesis of the other in their potentialities. After the opening chorus—which finishes with the statement 'And there shall be no profit hath man of all his labour wherein he laboureth Parryesque theme in its Bach-like idiom. Here it is:

While this is going quietly on, the choir is occupied with enumerating the various things for which, according to the Preacher, there is 'a time.' The bass then resumes his moralisings, after which the welcome voice of the soprano is heard with the familiar invitation, 'Ho! every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, &c.' This leads to the final section of the work, a well-developed chorus, ending with the assurance 'Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on Thee,' the chord of F, sung pianissimo with the major third in the soprano part, bringing this thoughtfully-conceived work to a beautiful ending. The soloists were work to a beautiful ending. The soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls and Mr. Plunket Greene, and Sir Hubert conducted a performance which, if not above reproach, testified to the pains that had been taken in the preparation of the work.

The afternoon's music terminated with a meritorious performance of Brahms's Symphony in C minor that reflected credit on the festival conductor, Mr. Ivor Atkins, and his most efficient players. 'I could play that symphony without the music,' remarked an experienced member of the band to me after the performance; and I have no doubt he could. Perhaps, by way of novelty, we may some day listen to a symphony played—say by the London Symphony Orchestra—without a conductor.

For a study in contrasts, go to a Three Choirs festival. On Wednesday evening the 'solemn musick' of the cathedral was exchanged for the merry strains of the concert room, and who will deny that the change did not come as a pleasant relief? The programme of the concert, given in the Public Hall, is subjoined:

PART I. PART II. Symphonic poem—'Don Juan'... Richard Strauss.
Songs { 'Birds in the high Hall-garden' } Arthur Somervell.
Mr. PLUNKET GREENE.
Prélude symphonique—'1.'Après-midi d'un Faune'... Debussy.
Spring song—('Die Walküre')... Wagner.
Mr. Waller Hyde.
Overture—'The butterfly's ball'... Cowen.

One would like to have known that 'Little minister' whose jocosities are so charmingly reflected by Sir Alexander Mackenzie in his cheery music and picturesque orchestration. No wonder that the audience thoroughly enjoyed such a good dish of melodic fare so appetisingly prepared and so daintily served up. The limitations of space preclude detailed reference to the remainder of the programme, the three novelties excepted. The fantastic poem 'The pierrot of the minute,' founded on Ernest Dowson's poem, and composed by Mr. Granville Bantock, was specially interesting, as it shows this interesting as the status of the pierrot of the minute,' founded on Ernest Dowson's poem, and composed by Mr. Granville Bantock, was specially interesting, as it shows this imaginative composer in his most mature vein, as I understand this is his latest work. As was fully expected, the characteristic themes go hand in hand with brilliant and fanciful orchestration, the result being a remarkable example of modern programmemusic that is sure to have many admirers. Sir Edward Elgar's Suite No. 2, 'The wand of youth,' consists of six pieces which formed 'music to a child's play,' composed at Worcester nearly forty years ago. pieces, like those of Suite No. 1—produced at Queen's Hall, London, on December 14, 1907—have been much touched up, though their main features remain as originally written. Their titles are: March, The Little Bells (Scherzino), Moths and Butterflies, Fountain Dance, The Tame Bear, and The Wild Bears. It is difficult to say which to admire most of these half-dozen little tone-pictures. They are so varied in their rich orchestral colouring, yet so melodious withal, that they greet the ear with peculiar charm as the message of one who has something very pleasant to communicate through the medium of the orchestra, and who delivers his message in welcome tones. The Suite so pleased the audience that they insisted upon an encore, and 'The Wild Bears' movement was repeated.

Dr. Brewer has composed a stirring song in his setting of W. E. Henley's words 'England, my England.' By skilful means he has avoided the rhythmic and harmonic monotony which might have resulted from the length of the poem (five verses), while the orchestration—which seemed somewhat overpowering in the small concert-room at Worcester-reflects the patriotic nature of the words. Mr. Plunket Greene did all that was possible for the song, which had the advantage of the composer's conductorship. Special mention should be made of the excellent rendering of Strauss's 'Don Juan,' ably conducted by Mr. Atkins, as was the remainder of the concert, except the Bantock and Elgar novelities, which were performed under the direction of their respective composers.

On Thursday the performances were resumed in the cathedral, those in the morning being Sir Charles Stanford's Stabat Mater (Op. 96), produced at the Leeds musical festival of 1907; Beethoven's Violin concerto (soloist, Mischa Elman); and Dr. Walford Davies's 'Everyman': and in the evening Bach's Magnificat; Mr. Ivor Atkins's 'Hymn of Faith' (produced at the last Worcester festival, 1905); and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise.' Detailed criticism of these six works is hardly necessary. In placing their performances on record, it should be stated that the impressiveness of the Stabat Mater (conducted by the composer), no less than that of 'Everyman,' was deepened by being heard in such appropriate surroundings as a stately cathedral affords. Mischa Elman again triumphed in his performance of the Beethoven concerto needs only to be stated, but the cadenzas he introduced sounded very trivial in the

It was indeed delightful, in the evening, to listen to the strains of dear old Bach in his noble Magnificat. How charming are the flutes in the air 'Esurientes implevit bonis,' contrasting as the accompaniment does with the jubilation and trumpetings of the other parts of this fine work of the great Cantor. The inclusion of Mr. Atkins's 'Hymn of Faith' in the programme was fully justified; it is the work of a thoughtful-minded musician—moreover, it is not without many touches of real beauty. The vocal soloists on Thursday were Miss Edith Evans, Miss Dilys Jones, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Plunket Miss Dily's Jones, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Plunket Greene (in the Stabat Mater); Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Mildred Jones, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. William Higley (in 'Everyman'); Miss Alice Lakin (in the 'Hymn of Faith'); Miss Edith Evans, Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Mildred Jones, Mr. John Coates and Mr. William Higley (in the Magnificat); and Miss Gleeson-White, Madame Le Mar, and Mr. John Coates (in the 'Hymn of Praise'). Handel's 'Messiah' set its time-honoured seal on the festival by its performance, on Friday morning, to the delight of the largest congregation of the week. The soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Madame Clara Butt, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Robert Radford.

In summing up the festival performances, Mr. Ivor Atkins, the conductor-in-chief, is to be warmly congratulated on his efforts towards making the This is his fourth meeting a success musically. festival, and with it comes the fact that he has greatly increased his grip of the thing in its various aspects. He has the suaviter in modo and, as a chorus-master, only needs more of the fortiter in re in order to secure even better results in the future. Dr. A. H. Brewer (of Gloucester Cathedral) and Dr. G. R. Sinclair (of Hereford Cathedral) were above reproach as organists at the morning and evening performances respectively, and a warm word of appreciation is due to Mr. Herbert Thompson for the admirable analytical notes he contributed to the tastefully got-up programme books. Mr. Thompson knows exactly what to say in order to interest the general reader, and he has the rare gift of knowing how to say it in a manner that is as felicitous as it is instructive.

Not the least interesting hour of the festival was the one during which, as the solitary occupant of the Lady Chapel, I listened on Thursday afternoon to Evensong sung by the combined cathedral choirs of Evensong sung by the combined cathedral choirs of Gloucester, Hereford and Worcester. The service was Walmisley's fine eight-part setting of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in B flat, and the anthem S. S. Wesley's masterly setting of 'Blessed be the God and Father.' How splendidly the manifold the God and Father.' How splendidly the manifold the God and Father.'

At the previous Evensongs (Tuesday and Wednesday) the services were Wesley in E and Stainer in B flat, the anthems being 'God came from Teman,' by Dr. Steggall, and 'Comes at times a stillness as of even,' by the Rev. H. H. Woodward, Precentor of Worcester Cathedral and composer of the anthem 'The radiant morn.' At the concluding service, on Friday evening, the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were sung to Smart in B flat, and the anthems were 'Great is the Lord,' by Sir Frederick Ouseley, and 'Abide with me,' by Mr. Ivor Atkins.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS: NOTES ON ITS EARLY HISTORY.

Five and forty years have come and gone since a more or less obscure city organist—Richard Davidge Limpus, organist of St. Michael's Church, Cornhillgathered round him a little band of musicians who at that time little realized to what important issues they had set their hands. On November 23, 1863, Limpus—who was really the founder of the College—convened a meeting of organists, held at Mullens's Hotel, Ironmonger Lane, City, Joseph Surman in the chair. On that occasion a letter was read from Dr. S. S. Wesley approving the scheme, but the composer of 'The Wilderness' does not seem to have shown any practical interaction to the subsequent mark shown any practical interest in the subsequent work of the institution. On March 12, 1864, a meeting was held in Lower Exeter Hall, at which, upon the motion of Mr. E. Prout, Limpus presided and said:

It affords me extreme pleasure to undertake the task of laying before you a proposal to do something towards elevating and advancing our own professional status. It will be readily admitted that as a body we do not hold the same position in the eyes of the world as the medical and legal professions. Yet mankind generally, I believe, prefer Music to either physic or law. Nor do musicians even share worldly honours with painters—and why not? Music, unlike painting, is not only an art—it is a science as well; and the very highest purpose to which it can be applied is the Service of the Church. Therefore men who usually conduct the musical portion of the service ought certainly to be regarded as assistants in the ministration of Divine worship, and should be eminently fitted for that most important duty.

His further remarks were certainly prophetic when he said: 'Eventually, we shall hope, by the exertion of constant energy and perseverance, to obtain a Royal Charter, and thus secure the power of granting diplomas and certificates of merit.' Among other objects of the College then set forth, one was 'to improve the race of organists.' Among the organists present on that occasion were W. J. Westbrook, James Higgs, C. E. Stephens and Dr. Steggall.

On July 5 in the same year (1864), the first general meeting, held at Freemasons' Hall, was followed by an inaugural dinner. Sir George Smart presided at the meeting of the members, 'to whom he offered some valuable advice and pointed out the many difficulties which usually beset the path of organists, who, as a body, were a material part of the Church, although he feared that, unhappily, neither their efforts nor themselves were sufficiently appreciated; and while beauties of the anthem were brought out by that strenuously advocating the excellent principle of unity of purpose and action between organists and clergy, he warmly eulogised the objects of the College, which were likely to prove of incalculable advantage to the great body of organists in this kingdom.

Examinations, now the chief aim of the College, did not form part of the inaugural scheme. The promoters doubtless thought it desirable to feel their way and gain the confidence of the public in their project. To this end they elected to honorary membership Sterndale Bennett, Cusins, Hullah, Jones (organist of Canterbury Cathedral), Joule (of Manchester), G. A. Macfarren, Ouseley, Cipriani Potter, and Rea (of Newcastle). But while examinations were deferred for a time, composition competitions and lectures were at once initiated. Two prizes, of ten guineas each, were offered for the best organ piece and the best anthem. For these no fewer than ninety competed. The prize-winners were Henry Hiles, for the organ piece, and J. Hamilton Clarke, for his anthem 'The Lord is my light and my salvation.' The adjudicators were E. J. Hopkins, E. G. Monk, W. Spark, C. Steggall and C. E. Stephens.

The first series of lectures was as follows:

October 18, 1864. Church Music - Dr. S Nov. 15, 1864. The early English organ builders - Dr. Steggall.

Dr. E. F. Rimbault. 13, 1864. The progress of organ building from the Dec. time of Smith and Harris down to the period of the Great Exhibition of 1851 E. J. Hopkins.

Feb. 14, 1865. The history of musical notation

John Hullah. March 21, 1865. Church organists past and present; their duties, responsibilities, rewards, W. B. Gilbert. and prospects

The following extracts from a long letter written by Limpus, the secretary, which appeared in the Musical Standard of October 8, 1864, speak for themselves:

THE COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.—A REPLY TO 'AN ORGANIST.'

To the Editor of the 'Musical Standard.'

SIR,—Your correspondent, signing himself 'An Organist,' has asked certain questions about the College of Organists, which I will now answer seriatim.

First, however, let me thank you for having endeavoured to appease his hot anxiety by an immediate partial reply in a short leader. ['How is the College of Organists?'] His

1. What is it going to do? Ans.: The best it possibly can with the funds entrusted to its charge for the benefit of its members.

2. Has it any office?—Ans.: Yes. It has a temporary office and committee room at the Freemasons' Hall, Great Queen Street, Lincoln's Inn-fields.

3. Where can we obtain a printed statement of its officers, subscribers, members, and intentions, etc.?—Ans.: At the office, by previously making a written application for the same to the Honorary Secretary.

4. Where is the Treasurer?—Ans.: When any business connected with the College requires his attention, he is always at his post, and could of course be reached through any letter addressed to Freemasons' Hall, as aforesaid, and would always be ready to receive subscriptions.

5. Where (in London) is the Secretary?—Ans.: In many parts of it almost every day. But presuming that an address is required, I beg to say, that when engaged on the affairs of the College, he is to be found at the office, where all communications intended for him should be addressed.

6. When are we to be put out of our anxiety as to the winner of the Prize Anthem?-Ans.: Now, and at once. The successful competitor for the Anthem Prize is Mr. J. Hamilton Clarke, of Dublin.

Another query is put respecting some imaginary delay. {can assure your anxious correspondent that no delay and Hamilton Clarke's prize anthem was sung, and whatever has taken place. The umpires have had a most difficult and onerous task to perform, and they were quite right not to exercise undue haste in the performance of it.

I regret to find 'an Organist' asserting his belief that the establishment of the College of Organists is 'an attempt to benefit his class,' and immediately afterwards selfishly declaring that he would join it if he knew what was to be got by so doing.

Expressions of discontent, however, from non-members will at any time receive attention, as it is competent for them to enter the Society in accordance with the Rules, and then they have by right a voice in the government thereof.

I am, Sir, yours obediently,
RICHARD LIMPUS,

Hon. Sec. to the College of Organists.

The year 1865 opened with a social function attended by 500 guests, and was thus recorded in THE MUSICAL TIMES of February, 1865:

The first Conversazione of the College of Organists took place on Tuesday, the 17th ult., at the Freemasons' Hall, Great Queen Street, when a Concert was very excellently performed before a large number of the friends and supporters of the new Society. We should have been pleased to see that the entertainments provided had been selected with more especial reference to the objects of the College; but we presume that the design of the promoters of the Conversazione was simply to assemble a number of professors and amateurs together, so that the state of progress of the Society might be brought prominently before them. By the published Report, we perceive that there are nearly 150 members; that two prizes of ten guineas each for original compositions have been offered; and that for these prizes ninety works have been received, and are under examination. If anything can be done by this Society to raise the status of organists—a consummation which pre-supposes that the clique feeling, which has been the ruin of so many musical undertakings, can be kept out of it—we need scarcely say that we wish the College of Organists every success.

In the same year the Archbishop of Canterbury (Dr. Longley) consented to become President, and the Bishop of London (Dr. Tait) the Vice-President of the College.

At the general meeting held at Freemasons' Hall, June 29, 1865, the Rev. Mackenzie E. C. Walcott, precentor of Chichester Cathedral, in the chair, the following twenty gentlement were elected to serve on the first Council of the College:

Mr. W. H. Adams, St. Martin-in-the-Fields. Dr. Arnold, Winchester Cathedral.

Mr. H. Baumer, Dulwich College.

Mr. H. Baumer, Duiwich College.
Mr. J. Blockley, Jun., St. Saviour's, Haverstock Hill.
Mr. T. Bedsmore, Lichfield Cathedral.
Mr. Alexander S. Cooper, St. John's, Putney.
Mr. G. Cooper, Chapel Royal, St. James's.
Mr. J. Coward, Crystal Palace and Lambeth Church.
Mr. W. B. Gilbert, Mus. Bac., Abbey Church, Maidstone.
Mr. John Goss, St. Paul's Cathedral.
Mr. E. Harbert Mrs. Bac., Sharborne Abbey, Dorsat

Mr. E. Herbert, Mus. Bac., Sherborne Abbey, Dorset.

Mr. James Higgs, St. Michael's, Stockwell. Mr. E. J. Hopkins, Temple Church. Mr. E. M. Lott, St. Helier's, Jersey.

Dr. E. G. Monk, York Minster.

Dr. E. F. Rimbault.

Dr. Steggall, Lincoln's Inn Chapel.
Mr. C. E. Stephens, St. Clement Danes, London.
Mr. James Turle, Westminster Abbey.
Mr. W. J. Westbrook, St. Bartholomew's, Sydenham.

During the first ten years of its existence the College held special services in various London and provincial churches. On October 29, 1864, a full choral Evensong took place at St. Michael's, Cornhill, when the service was Hopkins in A, Samuel Wesley's 'In exitu Israel,' Hiles's prize organ piece was played. A similar service, at which prize compositions were sung and played, took place at St. Michael's, Cornhill, on May 24, 1866, the organists being James Higgs, Henry Hiles, and Richard Limpus. Subsequent services were held at St. Helen's, Bishopsgate (1868), St. George-the-Martyr, Queen Square, Bloomsbury (1869 and 1870), St. George's, Bloomsbury (1872 and 1875), St. Nicholas Church, Chislehurst (1873), and St. Paul's Cathedral (1874 and 1875).

The present writer well remembers the 'full choral service, of 1869 at St. George-the-Martyr, Bloomsbury. On that occasion Sir Frederick Ouseley preached, and his Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in B flat (MS.) were sung, as were the following three prize anthems:

The Lord ordereth a good man's going (1869). J. F. Bridge, Mus. Bac.

The Lord is my light, and my salvation (1864). J. H. Clarke. O give thanks unto the Lord (1868) Edwin Edwards.

Dr. Steggall and 'J. Frederick Bridge, Esq., Mus.Bac., Oxon. (Organist of Manchester Cathedral)' presided at the organ, and, to quote from the service-paper, 'the choir will consist of Gentlemen and Boys from

Her Majesty's Chapels Royal,

St. Paul's Cathedral, St. George's, Bloomsbury,

St. George-the-Martyr,

Bloomsbury, St. Clement, Eastcheap, St. Mary, Aldermanbury,

All Saints', Margaret Street,

Westminster Abbey, Lincoln's Inn Chapel, Quebec Chapel,

St. Mary, Haggerstone, St. Michael's, Cornhill,

St. Stephen's, Coleman Street,

St. Helen's, Bishopsgate, &c., &c., &c.'

At St. Paul's Cathedral, on St. Cecilia's Day, 1875, Purcell's Te Deum was sung to the accompaniment of a full orchestra (very much out of tune with the organ!), and at St. George's, Bloomsbury, the greater part of Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio' was performed on January 6, 1875.
(To be continued.)
